A VINDICATION OF THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL, AND A FUTURE STATE.

By WILLIAM ASHETON, D.D.
Rector of Beckenham in Kent, and Chaplain to His Grace the Duke of ORMOND.

LONDON:
Printed for B. Aylmer, at the Three Pigeons against the Royal Exchange in Cornhill, 1703.
TO THE Illustrious His Grace
JAMES
Duke of ORMOND, &c.

Chancellor of the Universities of Oxford and Dublin, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, and Lord Lieutenant General, and General Governor of the Kingdom of Ireland.

May it please your Grace,

As your Grace is most Fortunately Circumstanced in this World;
( and may you long enjoy the Favour of your Prince, and the Ap-
A 2 plauses
The Epistle Dedicatory.

...plausus of the People), so 'tis the earnest and hearty Prayer of your Obliged Chaplain, that you may be Eternally Happy in the next. And that he may be an Instrument in the Hand of God (who often works by weak Means) to so desirable an End, he very humbly submits the following Discourse to your Grace's Censure.

The Scepticism and Infidelity of the present Age, is too Notorious to be Dissembled. 'Tis not only Practised, but Encouraged. For, as some have been so Impudent to Burlesque and Ridicule the Christian Faith, so others have been so Wicked as to Applaud and Defend them.

But when Those of your Grace's Eminence shall be so sensible of their Duty to God and the Queen, as to Defend our Faith as well as our Lives, we may then comfortably expect that Reformation of Manners, which hath been so much pretended, and I hope, ...
The Epistle Dedicatory.

in some Instances, sincerely endeavoured.

Blessed be God, we have a Queen, who sincerely endeavours the Reformation of all Her Subjects. Her Majesty doth not only Discountenance Vice by Her own Virtuous Example, but also by Her Authority, in those repeated Proclamations, which the Clergy are Commanded not only to Publish, but also to Explain and Enforce, as Occasion shall require. That this may effectually be done, we are to Reform Mens Principles as well as their Practices. For whilst some are so Stupid as to fancy, That they have no Immortal Souls; but that after Death they shall be Nothing; whilst they flatter themselves to Die like Brutes, we have little cause to wonder that they Live like them too.

But I crave the Freedom, under the Protection of your Grace's Name, to assure them, it is most Certain, That when they Die, and leave this World,
The Epistle Dedicatory.

World, they shall not then perish like the Brutes, and cease to be; but shall still live and subsist, either in happiness or misery, to all eternity.

This I have endeavoured to confirm with the greatest plainness; and God grant it may have its due effect upon them.

And now I am sensible it will be expected, by all true lovers of the House of Ormond, that I should make some due acknowledgment of your Grace's worth and greatness.

With what valour and conduct you behav'd your self in several campaigns? With what generousness of spirit, your Grace promoted the publick welfare, and consulted the reputation of England, with the neglect, if not the hazard of your own private interest?

I have here a very large and pleasing subject. And if your Grace's modesty would permit, I could say much of my own own Knowledge. For as I am the Oldest Domestick Chaplain now Living, to your Grace's Grandfather of Renowned Memory, I had thereby the daily Satisfaction to observe the Budding Hopes of your Future Greatness.
The Epistle Dedicatory.

What I did then happily Presage, I have now lived to see; That your Grace is an Ornament to your Family, and a Publick Blessing to your Countrey. And that your Grace may long so continue, is the Hearty Prayer of,

(May it please Your Grace)

Your Grace's Most Dutiful

and Humbly Devoted Chaplain,

William Asheton.
THE INTRODUCTION.

The chief Cause of all the Wickedness and Prophaneness that abounds in the World, is the not Believing, or not Considering the Immortality of the Soul, and a Future State. For did Men firmly Believe, and then seriously consider, Meditate, and think upon this great Truth; That when they Die and leave this World, they shall not then perish like the Brutes, and cease to be; But their Souls, when separated from their Bodies, shall still live, and perform the Rational Operations of Understanding and Will; shall have Pleasure or Pain, even in the State of Separation: And at the last, when the great and terrible Day.
Day of the Lord shall come, then their Souls shall again be united to their Bodies, and shall never be parted more; but in an unexpressible manner shall be happy or miserable to all Eternity: I say, did Men firmly believe, and seriously consider these Things, O what manner of Persons would they then be in all holy Conversation and Godliness.

And therefore, for the Conviction of all loose sensual Epicureans and Deists, whose hope is only in this Life; and for the Confirmation and Establishment of honest sincere, but weak doubting Christians, I shall strictly examine, and by the Assistance of the B. Spirit, shall endeavour to confirm this great Truth, That the Soul of Man is Immortal; and that there is another Life after this.
A VINDICATION OF THE Immortality of the Soul, &c.

As preparatory to my Discourse, and that what I am to say, may be the more favourably received, I shall Premise these following Considerations.

1. We are not to be surprized that this Truth is contradicted. Bold forward Men, that are confident and assuming; whose Tongues, as they fancy, are their own; and who take the freedom to say what they list, may Railly and Banter the Immortality of the Soul.

Men may speak sharply and wittily against the clearest things in the World. As the Scepticks of old did against all Certainty of Sense and Reason. These Sophisters would pretend to prove, that there is no Sun in the Firmament, and that Snow is not White. But for all their Wit and vain Philosophy, we should think that man out of his Senses, that would now dispute the Being of the Sun, or the Colour of the Snow.

2. When we endeavour to prove the Immortality of the Soul, its Opposers must accept of such Proof, as the nature of the thing will admit. All Truths are not equally Evident, nor are capable of the same manner of Proof. Spiritual incorporeal Beings are not to be proved by our Senses. I hope therefore these Sceptical Gentlemen do not expect, to see a separate Soul with their Eyes, to hear it with their Ears, or to grasp it with their Hands. Some men indeed have been so vain as to fancy, That if the Soul of some deceased Friend should appear to them after his Death, and should distinctly declare, how and in what manner he doth live in another World, that then they would be convinced, That the Soul is Immortal. But alas! vain men, they are mistaken: For if they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead. Luk. 16. 31.
Immortality of the Soul.

3. In this Dispute concerning the Immortality of the Soul, I do suppose That there is a God. For unless this be granted, the best Arguments for the Soul's Immortality do lose their force. But I hope I may fairly be allowed to suppose the Existence of God: Not only because those Deists themselves, who deny the Immortality of the Soul, do pretend to acknowledge that there is a God; but chiefly because this first and great Principle of Religion, That there is a God; hath been so often, and so undeniably confirmed by others.

4. The Arguments I design to insist upon, shall not be nice and Philosophical, but Plain and Popular. It was, as the Learned Bishop Stillingfleet observes, the great Mistake of the Heathen Philosophers, that their Discourses about the Immortality of the Soul, were too subtle and intricate for the common Capacities of Men. 'How long might a man live, as the same judicious Prelate remarks, before an Entelechia would make him know the nature of his Soul the better; or an autoxymia persuade him to believe its Immortality? Insomuch that it is hard to determine, whether the Arguments used by them, did not not rather hinder assent, than persuade to it. For, plain Truths lose much of their weight, when they are rarified into Subtleties, and their strength is impaired when they are spun into too fine a Thread.
Immortality of the Soul.

The Immortality of the Soul, is a Truth of the greatest concernment: our Eternal Happiness or Misery depends upon it; and therefore a matter of so great consequence as this is, ought to be proposed in the most plain, most familiar, and most convincing Manner.

These things being Premised, I now proceed to my Proofs, when I have first explained the terms of the Proposition, by shewing,

1. What is meant by the Soul?
2. What is denoted by the Immortality of the Soul?
1. What is meant by the Soul?

I shall not pretend to give you an exact Philosophical Definition of the Soul. But I shall describe it in a plain and familiar Manner. Both Negatively, and Positively.

1. Negatively. The Soul of Man is not his Body: but something that is different and distinct from the Body. For the Body is the visible and sensible Part of Man, which is known and distinguished by our outward Senses. But the Soul being a Spirit, hath neither Flesh nor Bones, nor any Bodily Parts: and consequently can be neither seen nor felt, nor otherwise be discerned by any of our Senses. And in this our Blessed Saviour doth plainly instruct us. For when he would convince his Disciples after his Resurrection, that the Body where-
Immortality of the Soul.

In he appeared to them was a real Body, and that he was not a Spirit; he bids them touch and handle him. For faith he, a Spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have. Luk. 24. 39. The Soul therefore is not Corporeal, It hath no gross nor material Parts: but is of such a nature as doth not fall under the notice of any of our Senses.

And as the Soul is not the Body, so likewise it is not the Life of the Body. Which I affirm in opposition to the Author of Second Thoughts concerning Human Soul. Who tells us, He presumes he hath very good grounds to assert, Life to be properly Human Soul. And pretends to prove, That Life and Soul are the same thing in Scripture.

In Answer to whom we readily grant, that very often in Scripture, the Soul is called the Life, and Life the Soul. But then the expression is is only Figurative, the Effect being put for the Cause. For to speak properly, the Soul is not Life, but the Cause of Life; and Life is not the Soul, but the Effect and Consequent of the Soul. And this Author himself doth grant, 'That the Effect in many cases is taken in a vulgar acceptation for the Cause. For example, a man says, the Sun is so hot in such or such a Place, that he cannot endure it. Where it is plain he means the heat of the Sun, the Effect of it, and not the Sun itself, which is the Cause of that heat, &c. pag. 189.

And whereas he pretends to prove, That Life and Soul are the same thing in Scripture. Our Blessed Saviour, who best knows the nature of the Soul, doth otherwise instruct us. Fear not them which kill the Body, but are not able to kill the Soul. Mat. 10. 28.
In this Text we are plainly admonished of two Things. 1. That Soul and Body are different distinct Beings; since they who kill the Body, are not able to kill the Soul. 2. By Soul is not meant the Life. For then the Text should be thus Translated: Fear not them which kill the Body, but are not able to take away the Life. Which wrested Interpretation is contrary to common Sense, and is by no means to be admitted, though supported by the Authority of Mr. Hobbs. Who very Magisterially, without the least Proof, tells us, that in this Text, Body and Soul, is no more than Body and Life. V. Leviath. p. 340. But our present most Reverend Metropolitan (in the Creed of Mr. Hobbs Examined. p. 78.) doth thus Correct him.

Your Gloss is extremly wide of the unwrested meaning of the
A Vindication of the holy Text. For our Saviour counselleth his Apostles not to fear them that can kill the Body, but are not able to kill the Soul; making a manifest distinction thereby betwixt the Soul and the Life of the Body. For if the Soul were nothing but the Life of the Body, it were in the Power of every man to kill our Souls, unto whose Sword and Malice our Lives lay open.

2. Positively. The Soul is that Principle which is not only the Cause of external Life and Motion in the Body; but also of several internal Operations; which by inward Sense and Experience we are conscious to our selves of: As Understanding, Memory, and Will. Briefly thus.

The Soul is something in us which we never saw; and which is the Cause of those Effects which we find to be in our Selves. We See, we Hear, we Smell, we Taste, we Touch. But it is the Soul only which performs these Operations; or by which these Operations are performed in the Body. For immediately after Death, as soon as ever the Soul is separated from the Body, though all the Parts and Organs do still remain, the Body is a dead Carcase, without Life and Motion. Like the Idols of the Heathen; it hath a mouth, and speaks not: Eyes and sees not: Ears and hears not: a Nose and smells not: Hands and handles not: Feet and walks not: Psal. 115. 5, 6, 7.

But, besides these visible Actions of our outward Senses, there are other Operations of a more Spiritual refined Nature, which we are conscious of. We Think and Remember, we Reason and Discourse, we freely Choose and Refuse such Things as are presented to us. All these Operations we undeniably find find and perceive to be in our Selves. Now that which is the Principle of these Operations, and the Cause from whence they proceed, is that which we mean by the Soul of Man.

2. What is denoted by the Immortality of the Soul?

THE true Signification of the word Immortal is this. That is said to be Immortal, That liveth for ever. That never dyeth. That never shall decay. That shall never perish. That shall never have an End.

When, therefore, we affirm that the Soul is Immortal, we plainly intend this:

That when the Body dies, and is laid in the Grave, and is there turned into dust; the Soul doth still remain, and lives separate from the Body. It still continues to perform all those Operations, to the per-performance of which, the Members and Organs of the Body are not necessary. It still retains the power of Understanding; it Thinks, and Reasons, and Remembers. I say, when the Soul hath left the Body, though the Body is then destitute of Life, and becomes a dead Carcass, yet the Soul still lives in an active state, either of Happiness or Misery, and shall live and continue to all Eternity.
Immortality of the Soul.

And that the Soul of Man is thus Immortal, I shall, through Divine Assistance, endeavour to confirm from these following Considerations.

The Immortality of the Soul is

1. Desirable.
2. Possible.
3. Probable.

Now the reason why I propose this gradual Proof, is this, because there there are Two sorts of Men who are to be convinc'd.

There are some who acknowledge no other than Natural Religion; who reject all Revelation, and consequently the Holy Scriptures. And therefore, since all Discourse must be ex conceffis, these Men must be treated in their own way; that is, from such Principles as they themselves will grant.

With these Epicurean Deists, I shall discourse from the Three former Topicks; and shall endeavour to convince them, That the Immortality of the Soul is 1. Desirable. 2. Possible. 3. Probable. But further than thus I shall not pretend to proceed with these Deists. For the Soul being Invisible, and the Life to come being an Absent and Invisible State, can admit only of Moral Proof and Evidence, or of Divine Proof from Revelation. And since these these Epicureans do reject Divine Revelation, I can only treat them from the Three former Topics. But as for those who acknowledge the Divine Authority of the Holy Scriptures, as all Christians, and in particular, the Author of a late Tract called, Second Thoughts concerning Human Soul, pretend to do; I shall give them the utmost Proof; and do hope to convince them by the Testimony of God himself, That it is Certain the Human Soul is Immortal.
Immortality of the Soul.

1. Desirable.

It is very Desirable that the Soul should be Immortal, and that there should be another Life after this.

I Premise this Consideration, as a necessary Introduction to my following Proofs. For unless I can persuade these Deists, that what I propose is for their Advantage, and that it is their Interest to be Convinced, the most cogent Arguments will not be regarded. If Men will be Obstinate, and let us say what we can, will believe as they lift; If this be the Case, there is no Remedy, it is in vain to Discourse them. For Man is a free Agent, and hath liberty of Choice; and therefore it is impossible to make a Man to Believe against his Will. If these Men will not open their Eyes, but are resolved to wink hard, and will then Dispute, nay perhaps Swear, there is no Sun in the Firmament, who can Convince them? Pertinacie nullum remedium posuit Deus. God hath provided no Remedy for the Obstminacy of Men. But if they will be thus Obdurate, and are Resolved to be Miserable, we can only Bewail them, we cannot Help them. However,
Immortality of the Soul.

However, we will not cease, according to our Duty, to Pray for them.

That God would open their Eyes, and to turn them from Darkness to Light, and from the Power of Satan unto God, that they may receive Forgiveness of Sins, and Inheritance among them which are Sanctified, by Faith, that is in Christ, Acts 26.18.

And in Order to their Conviction, I shall, First, plainly represent to them; That it is very Desirable that the Soul should be Immortal, and that there should be another Life after this.

That we must all Die, and leave this World, is so certain a Truth, as not to be Disputed. The Examples of those who have gone before us, have made it so Evident, that the greatest Sceptick is thus far convinced. Since then 'tis Undeniable we must shortly Die, and leave leave this World, is it not at least desirable that some Part of us may still Live and Subsist in another?

For should Death put an utter End to us; should all our Hopes, and all our Comforts expire with us, and be laid in our Graves; what a Dismal and Melancholy Thought would this be? What Regret and Horror doth it raise in us? How doth even Nature shrink at it?

Indeed there are some Calamitous Circumstances, which have called for Death; and under which, Men have been so weary of this World, as to desire to leave it. For, as Job Phrafeoth it, Wherefore is Light given to him that is in Misery, and Life unto the Bitter in Soul? which long for Death, but it cometh not, and dig for it more than for Hid Treasures; Which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad when they can find the Grave. There the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest. There the Prisoners rest together, they hear not the voice of the Oppressor, Job 3. 20, 21, 22, 17, 18.
Immortality of the Soul.

From these Words of Job, and also from daily Experience, it evidently appears; That in some Cases, and under some Circumstances, Death is very desirable, tho' it should terminate in Annihilation, and utter Extinction.

For when a Man hath all his Life long been Oppressed with Calamities, Pinched with Poverty, Clouded with Disgrace, or Afflicted with Pungent Tormenting Pains, it may seem desirable, not only to Die, but even to be Nothing; that so he may have that Rest in the Grave, which he could not find above Ground. Præstat non esse quam miserum esse, is a known Determination.

Thus
Thus I grant it may be in some particular Instance. But as to those who are Prosperous, and at Eafe, the Case is far different. 0 Death, (faith the Son of Sirach) how Bitter is the Remembrance of thee to a Man that liveth at Rest in his Possessions, to the Man that hath nothing to vex him, but hath Prosperity in all things, Ecclus. 41. 1.

You who are Rich and Great, Vigorous and Healthful, who have Stately Houses, Beautiful Gardens, Pleasant Accommodations, and in every other Respect, Good Treatment in the World; are you not much Troubled that you must so suddenly leave them? Is it not some Check to your Thoughts, that all these Fine Things must so soon be Exchanged for a Dark Hole under Ground? Do you not cling and hold fast as long as you can? And when you observe you can stay no longer, longer, but must be gone, do you not at least wish, that you might live once more, to meet and enjoy the old Companions of your former Pleasures?
Immortality of the Soul.

O could you but creep out of your Graves into the Elysian Fields, there to be Treated with Nectar and Ambrosia, and some other Delights which a Carnal Fancy would Dictate; Could this be supposed, O ye Sensual Deists, who so earnestly contend for Annihilation, and are so fond to be reduced to Nothing, I say, I appeal to yourselves, Would not such a Life as this, in such Company, and with such pleasing Enjoyments, be far better and more desirable than to be Nothing?

Would not a Mahomet's Paradise be better than None?

Which being granted, I thus improve the Thought, and build up on your own Foundation.
If it is thus desirable to Live for Ever as Brutes, is it not much more desirable to live for ever as Men?

That this may be rightly understood, and may make its due impression, I shall briefly remind you what it is to live as Men.

To live as Men, is to live in the Exercise of those Rational Faculties which are proper to us as Men; I may say proper to us as Men: There be besides other Faculties, called Animal, or Sensitive, which are common to us with Brutes.

Whilst we are in this World, we must live an Animal Life as well as a Rational. We must, for the support of our decaying Bodies, Eat and Drink and Sleep, and perform other Offices of a Natural Life. But this is not properly the Life of a Man; which consists, I say, in the Exercise of his Rational Faculties, which are these Two, his Understanding and his Will.
Immortality of the Soul.

The Object of the Understanding is Truth. The Object of the Will is Goodness.

1. To Understand, is to Know and Embrace Truth. And how great a Pleasure this is, and what ravishing Satisfaction flows in this way, they who Value and Improve their Understandings, are capable to resolve you. With what an eager Concern do some Men pant in the pursuit of Knowledge? They deprive themselves of their beloved Sleep; They neglect their daily Food, and have scarce leisure to attend to the Necessities of Life. Nay, even Life itself, in some Cases, hath been too much neglected. For to omit those who by Immoderate Study have ruined their Bodies, and have brought upon themselves the Stone, the Gout, and Consumption, with other Chronical Distempers; I shall Instance only in the hard Fate of Archimedes, who who sacrificed his Life to the Pleasure of a Demonstration. For had that Great Man but a little intermitted his Thought, he had certainly saved his Life. But being so intent upon his Scheme, that he took no notice of the Message from Marcellus, the Rude Soldier, who little understood what he was doing, and who thought perhaps, he had flighted both him and his General, to the great Grief of Marcellus, kill'd him with his Sword.
A Vindication of the

What strength of Imagination was here! What height of Speculation was this, that would not be Interrupted by such imminent Danger!

But we have a further Instance from the same Archimedes, of the Pleasure of the Mind in the Search of Truth. With what Transport of Joy he cried out, εὐπρία, on another occasion, is sufficiently known.
Immortality of the Soul.

From these, and such like Instances, we are undeniably convinced, that the perception of Truth, which we call Knowledge, is very pleasing to a Rational Being; and that the Eye of the Soul, the Understanding, is even Transported in the Contemplation of it: and so far Transported, that the highest Gratifications of Sense are mean and contemptible; nay, even as nothing to the Rapture of a Thought. For as Plutarch somewhere observes, When did any Epicure cry out $\beta\nu\surd\alpha\nu\nu\nu\alpha\nu$ with so much Joy, as Archimedes did $\zeta\nu\pi\nu\mu\nu\alpha$?

Now if Knowledge in this Life is so Transporting, how Ravishing, may we suppose, will it be in the next?

Our Knowledge in this Life is very Imperfect, and consequently, the Satisfaction we receive from it is proportionably Imperfect. But when that that which is Perfect is come, then that which is imperfect, or in Part, shall be done away. For now we see through a Glass, Darkly, but then Face to Face. Now I know in part, but then shall I know, even as also I am known, 1 Cor. 13. 10, 12.

We see now through a Glass; τὰ ἄπόδειξις, tanquam in Speculo, as in a Mirror. In which we do not see the thing itself immediately, and directly; but only the Image and Appearance of it by Reflection.

Or else, We see through a Glass, tanquam in Perspectiva, vel Inspectorius, as through a Perspective, whereby an Object is viewed, not only by Reflection, but also at a Distance. We now see through a Glass, Darkly, τὰ αἰνίγμα, in a Riddle. Which is an Obscure, a Doubtful, and Perplexing Declaration of a Thing. But then Face to Face. That is, Then, in the other World; we shall not see see God at a Distance, as we do now by Faith, which is our Perspective; nor by Reflection, as we now see him in the Glass of the Creatures; but we shall have an immediate and direct view of him. We shall see him Face to Face, that is, Openly, Plainly, and Distinctly. For then we shall know, as also we are known. that is, as God now knows us, so shall we then know him, as to the Truth and Certainty of our Knowledge.

But we shall not only Know God in the other World, but we shall Love him, and Enjoy him. For as our Understandings shall know and enjoy God as he is Truth, so our Will shall Love and Embrace Him as He is Goodness. For,

2. Goodness is the Object of the Will, as Truth is of the Understanding.

And there is an unexhaustible
Fountain of both in God: For the Divine Perfections are Infinite; and consequently, can never fully be discovered by Finite Creatures. O! what ravishing Satisfaction will the Soul then enjoy, when its Rational Faculties, the Understanding, and the Will, do so vigorously employ and exercise themselves upon their proper Objects? How will every new discovery of Truth, and every new degree of Goodness, raise and enlarge the Soul, and encrease its Joy and Pleasure? For when the Soul shall break loose from the Body, which doth now clog and confine it; and hath made its Entrance into the Invisible Regions of Blessedness, how sprightly and active, how lightsome and cheerful, will she feel her self? Oh! into what excellent Conversation will she then be admitted, when she comes into Mount Sion, and unto the City of the Living
Immortality of the Soul.

Living God, the Heavenly Jerusalem, and to an Innumerable Company of Angels, to the General Assembly and Church of the First-born, which are written in Heaven, and to God, the Judge of all, and to the Spirits of Just Men made Perfect, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the New Covenant, Heb. 12. 22, 23, 24. Oh! What Blessed Society is there? Who is not Transported with the Expectation of it?

Society is the Desire and Satisfaction of a Rational Being; and the Possession of the whole World would be uneasie without it. It is not good for the Man to be alone, was declared concerning Adam, whilst in Paradise, and in Innocency. And were it possible for a Man to remain alone for many years in the most Beautiful Palace, it would not please him so well as the meanest Cottage with Company.

But,
But, alas! in this World, that which is our Desire, is too often our Torment. For though Conversation is very desirable, and most Men are out of Humour till they can get into Company, yet it is certainly one of the greatest Torments of Humane Life, to suffer the Follies, the Impertinencies, and Rudeness of Ill-natur'd, and Ill-bred People. Nay, even sometimes those who are otherwise Wise and Good Men, are subject to such Weaknesses and Mistakes as may make their Conversation very uneasie. But in Heaven, the Spirits of just Men are made Perfect. That is, They are freed from Ignorance and Self-interest, and all those unsociable Passions of Envy and Jealousie, of Malice and Revenge. They are perfectly refined from all that Folly and Peevishness, that Disguise and Dissimulation, which is the Bane of Conversation in this World. There,
Immortality of the Soul.

There, in those Blessed Regions, is perfect Knowledge, and perfect Love; Knowledge to instruct in all the wise Arts of Endearment, and Love to oblige, to use and improve them.

O what happy Conversation must this needs be!

But now, how this Blessed Conversation is managed, and wherein the Happiness of Heaven doth consist, no Human Language can fully express. Only I shall endeavour to give such a short, tho' imperfect Idea of it, as that you shall confess, that it is at least very Desirable there should be such a Happiness, and that the Soul should be Immortal, for ever to enjoy it.

Hearken then, O ye Sceptical Deists, and be instructed: Hear what the Holy Scriptures, those Oracles of Truth, do declare concerning that Future Happiness; and then 'tis hoped hoped, you will at least have Ballaam's Wish; Let me die the death of the Righteous, and let my last end be like his, Numb. 23. 10.

And First, These Holy Scriptures
do declare; That there is a Place called The Heaven of Heavens; the Highest Heaven; as being far above and beyond these visible Heavens.

A Description of Heaven.

That there is something above and beyond this lower Region of the Air, we plainly see with our Eyes.

We see the Sun, the Moon, and a multitude of Stars, more than we can number (though he who made them can tell their Number, and call them all by their Names.)

At what distance these Globes of Fire are placed, notwithstanding the Boldness of Astronomical Conje-
tures,
Immortality of the Soul.

...atures, we are wholly ignorant. But this we may observe, and may rationally conjecture from the Frame and Compages of the World, That there are invisible Regions, but how many we know not, far above and beyond these visible Orbs. The highest of which is the Royal Palace of the King of Kings, the Great Sovereign of the Universe: In which, as in His Presence-Chamber, He doth gloriously discover His Majesty, His Greatness, and His Goodness, to Angels and Men. There Thousands Thousands minister unto Him, and Ten Thousand times Ten Thousand stand before Him, Dan. 7. 10.

And not only these Glorious Angels, who are now his peculiar Retinue, but also poor. Fallen Man, through the Mercy of God, and the Merits of Jesus Christ, shall one day make up the number of that Heavenly Heavenly Train. These His Servants shall serve him, and they shall see His Face, Rev. 22. 3, 4. For we know, saith St. Paul, that if our Earthly House of this Tabernacle were dissolved, we have a Building of God, an House not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens, 2 Cor. 5. 1.

And St. Peter assures us, that there is an Inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in Heaven for us, 1 Pet. 1. 4.

The which Testimonies of S. Peter and S. Paul are thus comfortably confirmed by our Blessed Saviour. Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In my Father’s House are many Mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you: I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto my self, that where I am, there ye may be also, John 14. 1, 2, 3.
Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my Glory, which thou hast given me, John 17. 24.

But though Heaven is a most glorious Place, very Richly furnished and adorned, for Infinite Wisdom and Infinite Goodness hath contrived and prepared it, yet a Local Splendor, without some farther Qualifications, will not make us happy.

For to speak properly, Happiness is Internal, in the Frame and Temper of the Mind: without which suitable Disposition, all External Accommodations will be vain and nothing. Which I thus explain and confirm.

Some Men do very much value Stately Apartments; Plentiful Tables; Richly Furnished Beds; choice Consorts of Musick; Youth and Beauty, and such like. But now were were these very Men, in the midst of these external Accommodations, wrack'd with the Stone, or but the Gout in Extremity, all these fine Trappings would be little regarded.

This familiar Comparison may sensibly instruct us, that there is more required to the Happiness of Heaven, than the Splendor of the Place. For,

Secondly, The Happy Inhabitants of that Glorious Place are perfectly secured from all Pains of Body, and Discomposure of Mind, which are so pressing, and so frequent in this lower World, that we very pertinently call it the Vale of Tears.

But in Heaven all Tears shall be wiped away, and the causes of them.

And God Himself shall be with Men, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all Tears from their Eyes; and there shall be no more Death, neither Sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be
Immortality of the Soul.

be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. Rev. 21. 3, 4. The former things are passed away. That is, All those Evils, Troubles, and Calamities which they saw and suffered in this World, will forever vanish and disappear. There shall be no Poverty, no Sickness, nor no Pain to torment our Bodies: There shall be no Cares to distract our Minds, nor Fears and Disappointments to perplex our hearts, and discompose our Souls.

But this, though Great, and very desirable, is but a Negative Happiness. Therefore,

Thirdly, Besides this freedom from Misery and Sorrow, in Heaven there shall be a perfect enjoyment of all that is Good. And,

1. In Heaven we shall have a most intimate enjoyment of Almighty God.

How that Blessed Being will then communicate Himself to His Creatures, we cannot now distinctly ex-plain,
A Vindication of the plain, (for we know but in part, and see through a Glass darkly,) but we may with certainty apprehend, he will do it in a manner suitable to the Nature of Rational Beings. Now God being a Rational Good, is capable of being enjoyed by Rational Beings, no otherwise than by Knowledge, and by Love, and by Likeness.

That our enjoyment of God doth consist in Knowledge, is plainly intimated by St. John. It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is, 1 John 3. 2.

It doth not yet appear what we shall be. That is, whilst we are in this World, our future State is very obscure to us, and we know little of it, as to any distinct and particular knowledge. For in things which depend upon Divine Revelation, and such certainly is our future State, it is impossible for us to know any more than God is pleased to reveal to us.

He hath plainly assured us in general, That Good Men shall be happy in another World: But the particular Circumstances of this Happiness are still conceal'd from us. Not as if God did envy us the satisfaction of a further Prospect, (we must not have such apprehensions of so Blessed a Being) but because we cannot bear it. We cannot see God and live: That is, the Imperfection of Human Nature, and the weakness of our Faculties in this State of Mortality, is not able to bear a full and clear representation of so great a Glory. And therefore the greatness of that Glory is now hid from our Eyes, not because we should not understand it, but because we cannot. In short: As the sweet-
A Vindication of the

ness of any Fruit is only known by the Taste; so Heaven is best known by the Enjoyment of it. When we awake up after his likeness, we shall be satisfied with it.

Only thus much we know of it at present, because our Saviour hath expressly revealed it, that the Blest-ledness of the Saints shall consist in the Vision of God. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God, Matth. 5. 8. And, We shall see him face to face, 1 Cor.
13. 12.

I hope these Deists (who are very apt to Ridicule what they have no mind to Believe) will not so grossly misrepresent our Seeing of God, as if we did expect to see him with our Bodily Eyes. For God
being a pure Spirit, cannot be the Object of any Corporeal Sense. But we shall have such a sight of him, as a pure Spirit is capable of. We shall
Immortality of the Soul.

Shall see him with the Understanding, which is the Eye of the Soul. So that to See God is to Know him: And to Know God is to Enjoy him. For the more we know him, such is his Greatness, the more we shall Admire him. And the more we know him, such is his Goodness, the more we shall Love him. And the more we Know him, and Love him, the more we shall Imitate and Resemble him. When we see him as he is, then we shall be like him, 1 John 3. 2. Or, as St. Peter Phrases it, we shall be partakers of the Divine Nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4. Not that we shall be made partakers of the very Essence and Nature of God, as some Ignorant Enthusiasts have Blasphemously affirmed; but we shall be made partakers of a Divine Temper and Disposition, as the word ἄνθρωπος often signifies, by having the Divine Attributes more and more more communicated to us. We shall be made like unto God in his Holiness, in his Goodness, in his Patience, in his Mercy, in his Justice, and in his Truth.

These Divine Qualities will make us fit Company for our Heavenly Father. For unless we endeavour to be like God by this God-like Temper and Disposition, we can never be admitted to the Blessed Sight and Enjoyment of him. In whose Presence is fulness of Joy; and at whose Right Hand there are Pleasures for ever more, Psal. 16.

2. In Heaven we shall have the Enjoyment of our Blessed Saviour; Who loved us so dearly, that for us Men, and for our Salvation, he came down from Heaven, was made Man, and by a long train of Sufferings, and at last a most painful and ignominious Death, did Reconcile us to his Father: and
Immortality of the Soul.

and being ascended into Heaven, and gloriously seated at the Right Hand of God, is not unmindful of us, but hath told us, he is gone before to prepare a place for us. And hath comfortably assured us, he will come again and take us unto himself, that where he is, there we may be also.

Now since the Society of Friends is the greatest Happiness, (it being the highest Satisfaction to live and converse with those whom we love) we may easily apprehend what a principal ingredient it will be of the Joys of Heaven, to be there admitted into the Presence of our Blessed Saviour, who hath owned and encouraged his Faithful Followers with the Title of Friends. Ye are my Friends, and I have called you Friends, John 15. 14, 15.

What Raptures therefore must it raise in us, to see this best of Friends so gloriously Advanced! To see this Blessed Jesus, who was so unworthy, nay so barbarously treated by an Ill-natured World; to behold him, I say, praised and admired, worshipped and adored by all the Court of Heaven: By Angels and Arch-Angels, by Cherubims and Seraphims, and by the Spirits of Just Men made perfect. Who shall all bear a part in that Triumphant Heavenly Song; Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive Power, and Riches, and Wisdom, and Strength, and Honour, and Glory, and Blessing; for thou hast Redeemed us to God by thy Blood, out of every Kindred and Tongue, and People, and Nation. Blessing, and Honour, and Glory and Power, be unto him that sitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever, Rev. 5. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

3. In Heaven we shall have Conversation
Immortality of the Soul.

Conversation with Angels and glorified Spirits. The Spirits of Just men made perfect.

And what excellent Company both these will be, we shall more sensibly apprehend, when we shall distinctly understand the nature of them both.

1. The Blessed Angels are the Inhabitants of an Invisible World, into which we are not to enter, till after Death: and therefore at present can with certainty know nothing of them, either of their Nature or Employments, without Divine Revelation.

As to their Nature, the utmost that is revealed to us, is this.

That they are Wise, Powerful, and Holy Spirits. That they are great Lovers of Mankind, and rejoice at the Conversion and Salvation of Sinners.
As to their Offices and Employments, we are indeed more fully instructed in Sacred Story. Which tells us, That the Holy Angels are the Splendid Retinue, the Royal and constant Attendants upon that great and Glorious King, whose Throne is in the Heavens, and whose Kingdom ruleth over all. Thousands Thousands minister unto him, and Ten thousand times Ten thousand stand before him. They stand continually before him, to behold his Face, expecting his Commands; and are in a constant readiness to do his Will.

The Scripture further tells us, That by the Divine Order and Appointment, these blessed Angels are ministering Spirits to us Men, sent forth to minister for them who shall be Heirs of Salvation, Heb. 1.14.

Hence we often read, both in the Old and New Testament, that the Wisdom of God employed his Angels, Angels to be the Messengers of his Will and Pleasure to Holy Men and Women. Instances are so many, I must not pretend to repeat them. They were sent to such and such Persons to Admonish and Instruct them; to Comfort and Support them; to Defend and Preserve them. And though these Blessed Angels do not now visibly appear, at least not so often as they formerly did under the Old Legal Dispensation, yet (as a Most Reverend Prelate hath made the Remark)

' There is no reason I think to doubt, but that God's Care extends now to Christians as well as it did to the Jews; and that the Angels have as much Kindness for Us as they had for the Jews; and there is no Reason to think, that the Angels are now either Dead or Idle.

Doubtless therefore these Invisible Guardians do still Attend us; and
and by the Divine Appointment do Admonish, Comfort, and Protect us, in many Instances that we know not of. But in the other World, it will be discovered what they have done for us, and how kind they have been to us, and how truly they loved us; and this will lay the Foundation of a perpetual Friendship, which will still be improving in kind Offices of Love and Endearment to all Eternity.

But besides these Holy Angels,

2. We shall have the Conversation of Glorified Spirits. The Spirits of Just Men made Perfect. All the Holy Men and Women that ever lived upon the Face of the Earth. And, which may more sensibly affect us, we shall again see and enjoy all our dear Friends and Relations who are dead before us. And having not seen them of a long time, having been parted from them, them, perhaps for many years, are you not pleased to think that you shall see them again? that you shall converse together, and enjoy each other in the dearest intimacy of Friendship to all Eternity?

How this Heavenly Conversation shall then be managed, I have already confess'd I cannot pretend distinctly to explain. The Laws and Customs of that Heavenly Country, and the Temper of its Inhabitants, are in a great measure concealed from us.

However, for the support of our Faith and Hope, we may be permitted to make some general Conjectures; and, to express myself familiarly, whilst we are in our Journey, we may think upon our Home, and what our Friends are doing there.

And here, we are not to doubt, but that the Conversation of the Saints in Heaven is a Rational Conversation, verfation, and doth confift in Knowledge and in Love. But how these Noble Operations will there be expressed, I fhall proceed with the greatest Caution and Modesty to examine.
A Vindication of the

The firft and chiefeft, the incomparably Principal and Supreme Object of their Knowledge, is the most Glorious Trinity, God Bleffed for ever. Who will then explain his Nature and his Works, in fuch a manner, and in fuch degrees, as finite Creatures are capable to receive. And since Infinite Perfections can never fully be discovered, known and enjoyed by finite Beings; Oh the unexpreffible Bounty of a gracious God, who hath given us Immortal Souls, capable to live for ever; whereby we may know, love, and enjoy him to all Eternity.

But I must not enlarge on this supereminent Object of our Knowledge,
Immortality of the Soul.

ledge, being now limited to examine;

How the Blessed Saints in Heaven do know each other?

Concerning which, I will presume to suppose, that the knowledge which the Saints in Heaven have of each other, is a distinct and particular knowledge; that is, They do not only know in general, that those Myriads of Saints, with whom they are surrounded, are all holy and happy like themselves, but they have a particular knowledge of their Persons, and what their Circumstances, their Conditions, and Behaviour was in this lower World.

And if we may be allowed to take an estimate of Heavenly Conversation by this which we have on Earth, (sic parvis componere magna) this is no improbable conjecture.

For Society is not pleasing without familiar Acquaintance.

With
With what caution, uneasiness and reserve do we converse amongst Strangers? But amongst our intimate Friends, with what freedom and satisfaction do we explain ourselves, and communicate our very Thoughts? Unless therefore the Saints in Glory were particularly known to each other, there would not be that intimate endearing Conversation, which the happiness of that blessed place doth allow us to suppose. Ignorance and Reserve do spoil good Company, and are the Bane of Conversation.

It hath often been enquired, whether the Saints in Heaven do know their near Relations, so as to say, This was my Father, this my Mother, this my Husband, this my Wife, this my Child, this my Brother, this my Sister, &c.

To which Enquiry I do with freedom make this Reply.

That
Immortality of the Soul.

That to deny such Knowledge, according to our present apprehensions, would be a great diminution of that future Happiness.

For, are you not now passionately desirous that such your Relations should be secured from the Wrath to come, and be safely placed in Glory? And would it not put you into a Transport, to be certainly assured that they are so Happy?

Now if you are so desirous that when your dear Relations die and leave you, they may go to Heaven, what Raptures will it raise in you to find them there?

Since therefore such distinct and particular knowledge of each other, would so heighten and improve the Happiness of the Blessed, we are not in the least to doubt, but that it shall be granted to them. Nay, I am so far from denying such knowledge, ledge, it is my Opinion, That immediately, at our first Arrival at those Glorious Mansions, we shall not only know our near Relations, but we shall distinctly and particularly know the whole Society of the Blessed, both Saints and Angels.

O what Millions of Millions of Glorious Beings, intimately known, and familiarly acquainted, shall be there met together? But how shall these Myriads of Glorified Saints spend their Time (so we speak in this lower World,) that is, what shall they do, in what they shall be employed to all Eternity, would be very pleasing to Examine.

But, alas! we know so little of the invisible World, and of their Glory that shall there be revealed, that we must be contented with very imperfect Conjectures.

And here we may be allowed, in opposition to the School-men, to declare;
Immortality of the Soul.

clare; That the happy Conversation of the Saints in Heaven doth not consist in a bare Speculation, gazing upon each other, and admiring each other's Perfections, which (as these fanciful Writers explain themselves) they see and contemplate in the Divine Essence, as in a Mirror.

This is a very jejune and insipid Notion. For doubtless there is Action as well as Contemplation in Heaven. Something to be done as well as enjoyed in that blessed place. As the Third Petition in the Lord's Prayer doth plainly instruct us. Thy Will be done in Earth, as it is in Heaven. God's Will is done by the Inhabitants of Heaven. There is Service and Obedience to be paid to God in Heaven. And this perhaps in more instances, and in greater variety than we are now able to imagine.

To
To understand this the better, we must observe, That Heaven is in Scripture described as a Kingdom; and consequently hath Laws and Statutes, Governors and Subjects, and those of different Ranks, Orders, and Degrees. Now if there are Laws, they must be obeyed; if Rulers and Governors, their Commands must be observed.

There are many Passages in the New Testament to support this Conjecture.

In the Parable of the Talents, as Recorded by St. Matthew, and of the Pounds, as by St. Luke, the Servant who had improved his Five Talents to Ten, and whose Pound had gained Ten Pounds, was very bountifully rewarded by his Lord. Which St. Matthew chap. 25. ver. 21. thus expresseth. Well done, thou good and faithful Servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee thee Ruler over many things. But St. Luke chap. 19. ver. 17. words it thus, Well, thou good Servant, because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou Authority over Ten Cities.
Immortality of the Soul.

In both these Evangelists here is express mention of Rule and Authority, conferr'd and bestow'd upon those who enter into the Joy of their Lord. But now what this Rule and Authority do signify in the other World, or what kind of Happiness is denoted hereby, is a great Mystery, which we know nothing of. Only this we know (as one well expresseth it) 'That there are no empty Titles in Heaven, but every degree of Dignity there, signifies a peculiar degree of Happiness.

We read likewise in the Gospel, of some to be the least, and some the greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. And St. Paul tells us, that as one Star differeth from another Star in in Glory; so also is the Resurrection of the Dead, 1 Cor. 15. 41, 42.

All which Passages do plainly instruct us; That in that Blessed State, there is great variety of Glory and Advancement. And tho' we know very little of another World, yet we may safely entertain this Notion of the Government of Heaven, That in that happy Kingdom, under God, the Supream Lord and Sovereign, there are numberless degrees of Superiors and Inferiors, Governors and Subjects. Though all the Saints are very happy, yet they are not all equally happy, but according to their different capacities and qualifications, they are plac'd in different ranks and degrees of Glory.

Now we are not in the least to suspect, when such multitudes of active Beings are met together, that they will be Idle; but will incessantly
Immortality of the Soul.

Faintly be employed, in mutual giving or receiving Commands from each other.

And to proceed in our Enquiry, we may further be assured; that such their Employments will be managed without the least trouble or disturbance. Indeed in this World, here is nothing but Hurry and Tumult, Disorder and Distraction; but there, in Heaven, every thing will be transacted with the greatest ease, delight and satisfaction.

In that blessed place, every one will be pleased with his present Station: Those that are Superiors will neither despise nor oppress their Inferiors. And those that are Inferiors, as being placed in a lower rank of Happiness, will not envy those that are above them, but will heartily rejoice in their Advancement. And thus in all those differences of Glory and Dignity between them, the the Inferiors do Reverence their Superiors, and the Superiors do Condescend to their Inferiors: and in so doing, they eternally converse with one another (notwithstanding all their Distances) with the greatest freedom, and most endearing familiarity.

But here we must fix, and can proceed no further. For how, or in what manner the Saints in Heaven do manage this their Conversation in particular, we are not able to discover. It doth not yet appear what we shall be. It is sufficient for us to know in general, that our Employment, whatever it is, shall be our unspeakable Pleasure; and as much above the Noblest and most delightful Employments here on Earth, as the perfection of our Bodies, and the powers of our Souls, shall then be above what they were in this World.

Let
Immortality of the Soul.

Let us therefore be admonished to restrain our Curiosity, and learn our Duty.

Let us humbly beg of God to fit and prepare us for this happy Society; to make us meet to be partakers of the Inheritance of the Saints in Light; and then, as soon as he pleaseth, bring us to the enjoyment of it. Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

From these Premises duly considered, I hope the Truth of my First Proposition will easily be granted, viz. That it is very desirable the Soul should be Immortal, and that there should be another Life after this.

But against this my first Assertion, Men of Atheistical Principles, and Sensual Practices, do thus Reply:

Object.
That it is indeed very desirable to be Happy, and to live in Pleasure. And the longer we can thus live, still the better. Could we but extend our Lives and our Enjoyments to the Longevity of the Patriarchs; to Six, Seven, Eight, or Nine Hundred Years; What a comfortable expectation would this be? But as Experience will not grant us such a happiness in this World, so neither will the Envy of others allow it in the next. For though the Right-hand Favourites have Projected a fine Scheme for themselves, yet they have drawn a dismal Scene for the Left-hand Crew. Depart from me, ye Cursed, into everlasting lasting Fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels.

This
This they tell us is our Portion. Now can any Man of Sense be so Stupid, as to think it desirable thus to live for ever? To roll in Flames, and to be eternally Tormented? Is it not therefore more desirable, that the Soul should be Mortal, and Perish with the Body, than that it should be preserved in an Immortal State, only to be a Monument of Eternal Vengeance?

Thus they Object. To which I return this

ANSWER.

That this way of Disputing, which I have partly expressed in their own Language, is not only Fallacious in itself, but also of dangerous consequence to the Disputers.
1. It is fallacious in itself. 'Tis that which Logicians call Fallacia Accidentis. Which I shall not explain in the usual instances of a Logick Lecture, but shall retort upon these Epicurean Deists, in their own beloved instance.

These Men do readily grant; That to live in this World is very desirable. And indeed they are so fond of continuing in it, that were it possible, they would never leave it.

But now were these very Men confined to a dark dismal Dungeon; there laid upon the Ground amongst Toads and Serpents, wrackt with the Stone or the Gout in Extremity: I appeal to themselves, if it is desirable thus to live in this World. Would it not be much better to die than to languish in such Misery? Therefore I conclude, in Contradiction to their Assertion, To live in this World is not desirable.

Let
Let them Answer this Supposition, and they have Answered themselves.

True, say they, to live in such Misery and Torments is not desirable. But what then? Is it a good Consequence from thence to Argue, That it is not desirable to live at all? For we may live at Ease and in Pleasure; We may live to enjoy the Comforts and Satisfactions of this Life. And this we are sure is much to be desired. And Therefore, notwithstanding your Exception, we do Affirm, That to live in this World is very desirable.

Now do but change the Scene from this World to the next, and the truth of my First Proposition is undeniably thus confirmed.

It is doubtless a very dismal Apprehension, That a poor Creature should be Eternally Tormented. And such a State is so far from being ing desirable, that it is good for that Man he had not been born. As to this wretched Person, Judas for Example, the Immortality of the Soul is not desirable; since he doth most passionately desire, that he might have died like the Brutes, that his Soul had died with his Body, and that both Soul and Body might have Perished Eternally.

Thus far indeed, in this sad Instance, it is not desirable that the Soul should be Immortal; that is, It is not desirable that the Soul should be Immortal, to be Immortally Tormented. And it is not desirable to go into another World, there to live for ever in Misery.

But this is not the true and full State of the Case. For blessed be God, he hath set before us Life as well as Death. Blessed be his Infinite Goodness, there is a Heaven ready to receive us, as well as a Hell open to devour.
devour us. We are capable of Everlasting Happiness, as we are liable to Eternal Misery. And if we are Miserable, it is our own Choice, and not any fatal Decree of Almighty God. Who doth not will the death of a Sinner, but rather that he should turn from his sin and live. for God sent not his Son into the World to Condemn the World, but that the World through him might be Saved, John 3. 17.

And therefore the Torments and Miseries to which Mankind is liable in another World, ought not in reason to be objected against the Immortality of the Soul, as if such a capacity of living for ever were not desirable.

For the true State of the Immortality of the Soul, and which may fully determine the Controversie, is briefly this.
A Vindication of the Almighty God, as a rich Instance of his Bounty and Goodness, hath made the Souls of Men of an Immortal Nature, and design'd them for a perpetual duration and continuance, in another State after this Life. The which future State will be either Happy or Miserable, according to the different Tempers and Dispositions of those that live in it.

Indeed they who have their Conversation in the Lusts of the Flesh, fulfilling the desires of the Flesh and of the Mind, and in St. James's Language, who are Earthly, Sensual, Devilish; they shall be confined to a Dungeon of Darkness, where they must live for ever, with the Devil and his Angels, in the most exquisite Torments.

But they who are made Meet, that is, who are fitted and prepared for a better place, they shall be made partakers of the Inheritance of the Saints in Light; and shall see God, the Fountain of Light and Happiness. For when the Lord himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, and the dead in Christ shall rise, then they shall be caught up in the Clouds, to meet the Lord in the Air, and so shall ever be with the Lord, 1 Thel. 4. 16, 17.

And therefore though accidentally, and through their own default, the Immortality of the Soul, and an Eternal duration is a Curse to some Men; yet in itself, and to those who follow the Divine Conduct, it is the greatest Blessing, and as such, is very desirable.

In short, it is not the Immortality of the Soul, but the Misery which attends it, and which they expect as their Portion, that these Deists are so much afraid of, and are so impulsively pressing to dispute into nothing.
The truth of this Observation is excellently thus confirmed by Minutius Felix, and Hierocles.

The former, in his Defence of the Resurrection against the Heathen, hath these Memorable Words. 'Nec ignoror plerisque conscientiâ Meritorum nihil esse post mortem magis optare, quam credere. Malunt enim extinguire penitus, quam ad supplicia reparari. Pag. 329. I am not ignorant, that some Men are so sensible of what they deserve, that they heartily wish they might be nothing after Death. For they would much rather be Annihilated, than Raised again to be Punished. But this, faith he, they rather wish and desire, than that they can force themselves to believe it.

This Observation of Minutius Felix is further confirmed by Hierocles. The Sentence is so large, I shall not repeat repeat it in the Original Greek. But his Words, as they are faithfully Translated, are these.

If Conscience awaken in a bad Man a sense of his evil deeds, which tortures his Mind, and puts him in fear of Punishment in Hell, his only remedy is to fly to Non-entity, or Not-being. So he cures one Evil with another, supporting his wickedness by the destruction of his Soul. He gives Sentence on himself, that after Death he shall be Nothing, to fly the Penalties of future Judgment. For a wicked Man will not have his Soul to be Immortal, that it may not subsist to suffer Punishment. He anticipates his Judge, by declaring it is fit that a wicked Soul should be reduced to nothing. But as through want of Counsel he was drawn to sin, so through Ignorance of the measure of things, he passeth wrong Judgment on himself. For the Judges of Spirits departed, framing their Thus far Hierocles. From whose intimation, that they pass a wrong judgment upon themselves, I proceed to Admonish these Deists; That this Wishing and Would ing that the Soul were Mortal, is not only Fallacious, and a false Argument in itself; But also,

2ly. It is of dangerous Consequence to the Disputers: Because, if they do not rectify their Notion of the Soul's Mortality, it inevitably betrays them to Eternal Ruin.

For alas! it is not their mistaken Apprehension that can alter the nature of things. Things will be just what they are, and as God hath made them, whatever vain Men may fancy to the contrary. If therefore the Wisdom of God hath made the the Soul of Man Immortal, and hath given it an Eternal Duration, it is not in the Power of these Men to Destroy it, or to make it Mortal. They may indeed kill the Body, but they are not able to kill the Soul. The Body shall die, and be turned into dust, as is undeniably proved by daily experience, but the Soul shall still live, either in Happiness or Misery to all Eternity.

Now considering the Temper of these Men, how incapable they are of the happiness of another World, they have just reason to expect a dismal Eternity.

But this, I say, is only their own fault. For were they qualified for it, were they fitted and prepared, or in the Apostle's Language, were they made meet, they might then enjoy the Inheritance of the Saints in Light. Which God grant upon their true Repentance, may be their Portion.
And thus, I hope, I have undeniably convinced these Epicureans and Deists, That it is at least desirable the Soul should be Immortal, and that there should be another Life after this.
I shall next endeavour to convince them, that the Immortality of the Soul is not only Desirable,
but also,

2. Possible.

We are now to examine, whether it is not Possible that the Soul should be Immortal, and that there should be another Life after this: And this Enquiry is of great concernment.
For on the one hand; If the Immortality of the Soul is impossible; if these Epicures are sure that there is no Life after this; if they have no rational expectation of a Hapiness or Misery beyond this World;
Then
Then the wisest thing they can do, will be to enjoy as much of this present World as they can.

For if there be no Resurrection to another Life, the Apostle allows the Reasoning of these Men to be very good; Let us Eat and Drink, for tomorrow we Die. If I say, they are well assured, and are certain that they shall be utterly extinguished by Death, like the Beasts that Perish, then they have nothing to take care of but their Bodies, because indeed they are nothing else; then they need not extend their thoughts, their hopes, or fears beyond this World, and this present Life; because they have nothing to do, but to please themselves with present Enjoyments, and to live so with other Men, as may most conduce to their temporal quiet, security, and satisfaction.

But on the other hand; If we have Immortal Spirits which shall live and and continue for ever: And if when we leave this World, we must presently go into another, wherein we shall be unspeakably Happy, or intolerably and eternally Miserable, according as we have behaved our selves in this Life; If it be thus, as most certain it is, 'tis then highly reasonable to take care of the longgeft Duration; and to be more folicitous how we shall live for ever in the other World, than how we shall pass over a few days or years in this.

And therefore it is the greatest folly, which yet, God knows, is the fatal mistake of most Men; I say, it is the highest Imprudence, to employ all our care and time about these perishing Bodies, and to make Provision only for the few days of our Pilgrimage here in this Life, without any regard to that Eternal Duration which we shall have in another World.
Immortality of the Soul.

Consider this, O ye sensual Deists, and shew your selves Men. Act rationally, and according to the Rules of Prudence. For what Man in his Wits, for a temporal convenience and satisfaction, would forfeit an eternal benefit and advantage; and to escape a present evil, which cannot last long, would run himself upon one infinitely greater, and which will last for ever?

Consider therefore what a dismal hazard you run, and what a foolish Scheme you have drawn, to Govern your selves by.

If your Souls are Mortal, and die with your Bodies, as you Wish, Fancy, and Dispute, then So. There is an end of all your Pleasures. This is the best of your Case; and the only happiness you can expect is, To be turned into Nothing.

But if when your eyes are closed in this World, you then find your your selves removed into another; into that invisible World Inhabited by Spirits, which you in your Frolicks have not only Disputed, but Burlesqu’d and Ridicul’d? Oh! what Surprize will then seize you? How effectually will you then be convinced, to your infinite trouble and confusion, that there is a God, and another Life after this, and a terrible Punishment to the Workers of Iniquity.

From these Premises I do thus faithfully Admonish you;

That nothing but the utter Impossibility of a future State can justify your Conduct. And therefore nothing less than a demonstration of the Impossibility of the thing; of your having immortal Souls that shall survive your Bodies, and subsist apart from them, and be extremely Miserable, or Happy in another World; I say, nothing but a De-
Immortality of the Soul.

demonstration of the Impossibility of this, ought to satisfy your Minds, in a Case of so great danger, and upon which so much doth depend.

Let us therefore now impartially Examine; Whether it is impossible that the Soul should be Immortal, and that there should be another Life after this?

Now a thing is said to be strictly and properly Impossible, not only which is difficult, and which may never be, as to the event, but which can never be, in the nature of the thing: That is, when it is a contradiction to the supposed nature of the thing, that it should be so, or so, then we truly affirm, That it is Impossible.

That the Notion of the Soul's Immortality is difficult, I readily acknowledge, (and therefore we are not to wonder that the best and wisest of the Heathen Moralists, G such such as Cicero, Seneca, Marcus Antoninus, &c. did sometimes talk very uncertainly about it; but all the Reason of Mankind, nay, all the Wit, Scepticism, and Sophistry together, can find no repugnancy and contradiction in it.

'Tis observed by a very Learned Man, That those who doubted most of the Soul's Immortality, yet confessed that there was nothing like a Demonstration against it. And those who took a Pride in opposing the common Sense of Mankind about these matters, yet never pretended to Evidence or Demonstration on their side.

If therefore our Modern Scepticks, who talk so much of Reason and Demonstration, will at last pretend, that the Immortality of the Soul is impossible, then let them prove it.
Immortality of the Soul.

But the Attempt is so extravagant, that I cannot imagine what Medium they will fix upon for such a Proof, unless they will pretend the Identity of Soul and Body. For it must be acknowledged, that if the Soul is the same with the Body; if the Soul is not a Substance really distinct from the Body, but only the more pure and refined part of Matter; Or if, as they phrase it, the Soul is nothing else but a certain disposition and modification of the Body; Then indeed it cannot subsist when separated from the Body; then there is an absolute incapacity in the Soul of subsisting after Death: then when the Body dies, the Soul must die likewise. And consequently, since it implies a Contradiction, that the same Being should live, and not live at the same time, on supposition that the Soul and Body are the same Substance, the Immortality of the Soul doth imply a Contradiction, and therefore is Impossible.

But now, if upon examination it do appear, that the Soul is a Substance different, and distinct from the Body; then it is possible to be separated from the Body; then it may live and subsist without the Body, and consequently it is possible that the Soul is Immortal.

I am therefore to prove, That the Soul is not the same with the Body, but that it is a Substance different and distinct from the Body.

And here I demand of these Deists, who are very severe Exactors, What kind of Proof do they expect? Do they require we should prove such distinction by Ocular Demonstration? that we should Digitum Monstrare, point at them with the Finger, and say, here is the One, and there is the Other; here is the Soul,
Immortality of the Soul.

Soul, and there is the Body? Do they fancy we should prove them to be different in Place? As Sceptical as they are, I cannot suppose them to be so absurd. And therefore this Controversie is not to be determined by our outward Senses, but by Reason, and the just consequences of Things.

And I hope it will be accepted as a very fair Proof, if I can Evidence, That the Pleasure and Pain of the Soul is different and distinct from the Pleasure and Pain of the Body.

If the Soul can be in Pleasure when the Body is in Pain, and if the Soul can be in Pain when the Body doth enjoy its Pleasures, Then since Pleasure and Pain are two different distinct Affections, which require different Subjects, it evidently follows, That if the Soul and Body are mutually in Pleasure and Pain at the same time, that then the Soul and Body are two different distinct Beings.

That the Soul may be in Pleasure when the Body is in Pain, is undeniably thus confirmed.

There is not a more pungent Pain than to be burning in Fire; and yet we read of some dying Martyrs, who have expressed such Pleasure, that they have sung for joy in the midst of the Flames. And of one particularly, who thus cry'd out: I feel no more Pain in this Fire, than if I were in a Bed of Down; but it is to me as sweet as a Bed of Roses.

Now what possible account can be given of such Transport of Joy, under the most exquisite Torments of their Bodies, if their Minds were not of a far Nobler and Diviner Nature than their Bodies?
Immortality of the Soul.

From these and such like Instances 'tis undeniably inferred, That there is something within us capable of Pleasure, distinct from the Body; and that the Pleasures of it may be so great, as to swallow up the Pains of the Body.

There is therefore a Spiritual and Immortal Being within us, not only distinct from the Body, but very far superior to it. And consequently, since the Soul is a Being different and distinct from the Body, it is possible to be separated from the Body, and to live and subsist without the Body.

Several other Arguments might be added to confirm this Truth. But they will more pertinently and methodically be considered under my next Topic; for that which is Probable must needs be Possible. When therefore I shall have proved that it is Probable, That the Soul is Immortal, mortal, I shall then ex abundanti have confirmed that it is Possible.

I am therefore next to examine, whether the Immortality of the Soul is not,

3. Probable?

NOW a thing is said to be Probable which hath the Appearance of Truth. Where the Arguments are such, and so many, as may induce the Mind to believe such a thing rather than the contrary, we properly say, it is Probable, or it is likely so to be.

When therefore we affirm the Immortality of the Soul is Probable, we denote this;

That though we have not yet proved it to be Certain (we are not yet come so far; we cannot say, nor prove all at once); yet at present it so far hath the appearance of Truth, that
Immortality of the Soul.

that some plausible Reasons may be given for it.

And these Reasons shall be drawn

1. From the Nature of God. 2. From the Nature of Man.

1. The Nature or Essence of God being Infinite and Incomprehensible, cannot otherwise be known than by his Works, (I now speak to those who reject all Revelation, and deny the Authority of the Holy Scriptures.) By observing what he hath done, we make some faint Conjectures what he is.

Now the Works of God are either Creation or Providence. And a due Consideration of both these may convince us, That it is at least Probable, that the Soul is Immortal, and that there is another Life after this.

1. Creation.
THE Wisdom of God is wondrously discovered in the Creation of this visible World, this Globe of Earth which we Inhabit. There is a Scala Naturæ, which to a considering Mind is very Surprising. O Lord, how manifold are thy Works! in Wisdom hast thou made them all: the Earth is full of thy Riches, Psal. 104. 24.

'Tis very admirable to observe the different kinds and degrees of Beings.

To begin with the lowest, viz. Inanimate Beings.

The several sorts of Earths, Fossils, and Minerals, are so many, and of such different Shapes, Figures and Perfections, that the greatest Naturalists are puzzled to explain them.
Immortality of the Soul.

Let us next proceed to Animate Beings. Of which there are Three distinct Specifick Natures. The Vegetable, the Sensitive, and the Rational.

1. Let us survey the Vegetable Order. And here who can enumerate all the various Species of Beings contained within that Sphere? It hath been the Work of Ages to compose an Herbal: Every succeeding Age having added something to the Labours of the former, but still leaving the Work to be finished by future Generations.

2. Let us next consider the Sensitive, or Animal Nature. Which is Twofold.

1. The Imperfect, called Insects.

2. The more Perfect. Distinguished into Birds, Beasts, and Fishes.

1. The Imperfect sort of Animals called Insects, which seem so contemptible, and are so generally neg-neglected as to be trod under Foot, are of wonderful Contexture; and are such Instances of the Divine Wisdom, as to awaken a considering Mind into a just Admiration of them. And therefore our Inquisitive Men, who have spent some time in examining their Nature, should be treated with Respect; and not so unworthily Ridicul'd for those Discoveries, which the Dullness, or Laziness of others were never able to make.

2. The more Perfect Animals are distinguished into Birds, Beasts and Fishes. The Kinds of which are so various, and their Nature so admirable, that though former Ages have attempted to enumerate and explain them, yet the Work is still imperfect, and is left to be improved by succeeding Posterity. Now since God hath so Richly furnished this Globe of Earth, the lowest lowest and meanest part of the Universe, with such Variety of visible Creatures, is it not at least Probable, that those vast immense Tracts of pure Æther, in which the Planets and fixed Stars are placed, should be likewise furnished with suitable Inhabitants? As this lower visible World is filled with Bodies and Corporeal Beings, may we not suppose, that those higher Regions are inhabited with Spirits? For since God is a pure Spirit and Omnipotent, we have no reason to doubt, but that he could make Creatures of a Spiritual Nature, and such as have no Principle of Self-corruption in them.
Immortality of the Soul.

The Wisdom and Power of God do convince us, that this is Possible; That God can do this if he thinks fit, and that he hath done it: that he hath made such Spiritual and Immortal Beings, is highly Probable from his Goodness. For it is the very Nature Nature of Goodness to communicate and diffuse itself, and to delight in so doing. And that this Goodness is eminently in God, the Psalmist plainly tells us, Thou art good, and thou dost good, Psal. 119. 68. Being thus good in himself, he is thereby inclined to communicate his Goodness to others. And since this Goodness did prompt him to Make and Create such variety of Corporeal Beings of a lower Rank and Capacity, why may we not be allowed to suppose, That he, who is a Spirit of Infinite Perfections, hath likewise made Spirits as well as Bodies; Rational Beings as well as Sensitive; and as to their continuance, not perishing like the Brutes, but of an Immortal Nature and Duration?

Now since we have no other way to know the Nature and Essences of Things, but by their Operations rations and Effects; and since Man is conscious to himself of such Noble Operations of Reason and Judgment, which we could never yet discover to be in Brutes, we thence infer, and are inclined to think, That Man hath a Principle within him of a Spiritual Immortal Nature; and that we were not made only to grovel on this Earth, but that we are to remove into another and better World.

But the Immortality of the Soul is Probable, not only from Creation, (because God, who is an Omnipotent Spirit can, if he please, Make and Create an Immortal Soul); but also from;

2. Providence.

As God made the World by his Power, so he Governs it by his Providence. And that he Go-Vindication of the

verns the whole Creation with the greatest Equity and Justice, is so fully acknowledged by the Heathens as well as Christians, that it needs no Proof. Now the Justice of Goervernment doth consist in the Equality of Distribution, in proportioning Rewards and Punishments to good and bad Men according to their Actions; or in Scripture Phrase, in rendring to every Man according to his Works.

We have this Natural Notion of God; That being Infinitely Holy,

Just, and Righteous in himself, he hath a great love and kindness for good and holy Men: and consequently, that he takes particular care of them, will preserve them from Evil, will do them good, and make them happy.

On the other hand, 'tis as natural to infer; That a Righteous and Holy God hateth Iniquity, doth loathe and abhor all Sin and Wickedness;
Immortality of the Soul.

edness, and will disown and punish all the Workers of it.

If we do acknowledge God to be Just, we must suppose such Proceedings; and are not to doubt but that Good Men shall be Happy, and Wicked Men shall be Miserable.

But now if these Distributions are to be considered with respect to this Life only; and if neither Rewards nor Punishments are to be expected in another World; there are then many Instances of God's Providence, wherein it would be impossible to defend his Justice.

How many Pious Persons have entirely devoted themselves to God's Service, and have lived in a constant exercise of that great Duty of Self-denial; who have not only sacrificed their Lusts, but even their Lives and their Estates to him? And yet supposing there is no Life after this, have received no other Reward for for so doing, but Poverty and Reproaches, Misery and Contempt, whilst they live, and at last a violent and tormenting Death.
A Vindication of the

On the other hand; How many Millions of wicked Men have lived in open defiance to all that is Sacred? Have Blasphemed the Name of God, Affronted his Authority, and Contemned his Laws: and yet supposing no other Life after this, have undergone no other Punishment, but to live prosperously, and die quietly in the midst of their Friends, and with the applause and commendations of all that surround them.

The matter of Fact is undeniable, and not to be disputed; daily experience confirms this Truth; That many pious good Men are very miserable; and many wicked profligate Sinners are very prosperous in this Life.

But
But now how to reconcile such Proceedings with the Justice of God, hath been one of those Enquiries, which in all Ages of the World, the minds of Men have been much perplex'd about.

The Heathen Moralists, who had no other Guide than the Light of Reason, have said many useful things on this Subject. And till the Sceptical Atheist can be convinced of the Divine Authority of the Scriptures, I can only desire him to peruse the Writings of the Heathen. And more particularly, two very excellent Discourses of Seneca and Plutarch.

The First is that noted Tract, Can. Bonis male sit, cum sit Providentia. The Other is that Admirable Discourse of Plutarch; De his qui fero puniuntur a Numine.

I shall no farther, at present, take notice of their Arguments, than as they they refer to another World. Which Plutarch most expressly thus enforces. 'Αγωγίζεται γὰς ὁσπέρ ἀθανασί, &c. This present Life is the place of the Soul's Combat, which when it hath finished, it then receives according to its Performance of it. "Οὕτω δὲ τῇ ζωῇ, &c. And since the Soul doth subsist after Death, it stands to the greatest Reason, that it should there receive either Reward or Punishment. Which is a full Proof of his former Determination, Εἰς ἐστὶ λύκα, &c. The same Reason which confirms Providence, doth likewise confirm the Immortality of the Soul; and if one be taken away, the other follows. Vid. Plutarch Morals, Pag. 560. Edit. Francof. Aubr.

From whence we may apprehend, that Plutarch's Argument is this.

God spares wicked Men in this Life, because the time is not yet come come wherein he intends to Punish them.

Indeed the Holy Scriptures do best vindicate the Justice of God; and have given us the most clear and full Account of his Providence. But yet the Heathens themselves, from mere Natural Reason, have had such a Persuasion of God's Justice, that they have given this as a great Reason why God did forbear to Punish wicked Men here in this World, Because he did reserve them for future Punishment in the next.

So that the Belief of another World gives a general Answer to all the difficulties of Providence in this. And in particular, to the Calamities of good Men, and the Prosperity of the Wicked.

And therefore, since the Dispositions of God's Providence in this World, towards Good and Bad Men, Men, are many times very promis- lose; nay, very cross and contrary to what might be expected from the Wise and Just Sovereign of the World; since many times it is the Lot of good Men, to Suffer and be Afflicted; and of wicked Men to live in a Flourishing and Prosperous Condition: I say, Things being thus, I appeal to the sober Thoughts of the greatest Sceptick; If it is not highly Probable, That there is another Life after this; and that there shall be a Day of Rempence; a solemn and publick distribution of Rewards and Punishments in another World. And that then the Justice of Divine Providence, which is now so Arrogantly disputed, shall be visible to Angels and Men, in rendring to every Man according to his Works. But,
Immortality of the Soul.

2. A due Consideration of the Nature of Man may convince us, That it is very Probable the Soul is Immortal, and that there is another Life after this.

That this may appear, we shall consider, 1. The Inclination of Man's Nature. 2. The Perfection of Man's Nature.

1. The Inclination of our Nature.

The Immortality of the Soul is a natural Dictate of our Minds. That is, we are naturally inclin'd to believe and acknowledge the Immortality of the Soul.

That Men do now generally believe the Immortality of the Soul, and a future State, and have so believed in all Ages, the present Experience of the World, and the Records of former Times, do abundantly Testify.
The Testimonies of the Ancient Heathen are so many and so noted, it would make a Volume to repeat them: and therefore I will not trouble myself or Reader, to transcribe such Passages; but shall only mention Two. The First is that known Saying of Tully: Permanere animos arbitramur, consensu Nationum omnium. Tusc. lib. 1. 'We do believe that the Souls of Men do abide after Death, by the Consensus of all Nations.

The other is that noted Passage of Seneca. Cum de animarum aternitate differimus, non leve momentum, apud nos habet consensus hominum, aut timentium inferos, aut colentium. Epist. 117. 'When we Dispute about the Immortality of the Soul, the General Consent of Men, either Fearing or Worshipping the Infernal Powers, is of no small moment with us.

As
As to the Moderns, I might be very large in reciting the Travels of Voyagers into all Parts of the World. Who having Examined their Customs, their Manners, and Religions, do inform us; That the Generality even of the most Barbarous Nations, did Believe the Immortality of the Soul, and a Future State.

Now how comes this Persuasion to have gained so universal a possession of the Mind of Man, and to have found such general entertainment in all Nations, even those that are most Barbarous? If there be no such Place as another World, no such State as another Life after this, how comes it to pass that the apprehension of it is so universal, that no differences of Age, or Temper, or Education, can wear it out, and set any considerable number of Men free from it? If it is an Error, how come come all Nations to be thus seduced? Into what can we resolve this strong Inclination of Mankind to this Error and Mistake? It is altogether unimaginable, but that the Reason of so universal a Consent in all Places and Ages of the World, and among all differences of Persons, should be one and the same. But no one and constant Reason of this can be given, but from the Frame and Nature of Man's Mind, which hath this Notion of the Immortality of the Soul, and a Future State, Stampt and Imprest upon it by the Author of its Being. Who being Infinitely Just, and Infinitely Wise, is neither capable of Deceiving or being Deceived.

This seems to be a credible and satisfactory Account, of so Universal a Consent in this Matter. From whence I conclude, in the Words of Tully: Quod Quod si omnium consensus, naturæ vox est: omnesque qui ubique sunt consentiunt esse aliquid, quod ad eos pertinent, qui e vitâ cesserunt: nobis quodque idem existimandum est. 'Since all Men in the World, in all Ages, and in all Places, have believed the Immortality of the Soul, and a Future State, We likewise are thence inclined, with great probability, to believe the same.'

If here the Scepticks shall pretend, that the matter of Fact is not true. And that upon the late Discoveries, whole Nations have been found without any Sense of God or Religion, or the least Apprehension of the Immortality of the Soul, or a Future State; To this I Answer, has not Supposing, but not Granting, that some Savage People (as for Instance the Caffres or Hottentots, at the Cape of Good-Hope, and the Caribbins, or the Inhabitants of the Caribbee-

A Vindication of the Caribbee-Islands, I say, supposing that these did appear so dull and brutish to their first Discoveries, as to have no Sense of God or Religion, nor any apprehension of a future State; What then? Is this any Argument, That the Immortality of the Soul is not a Natural Dictate? For these, and the like Savages are no other than Monsters in Nature: And it is a known Observation; That no Argument can be drawn a Monstro ad Naturam. A thing may be Natural, and yet some Instances may be brought to the contrary. But,

2. Those who have more strictly examined the manner of Life of these Savages, do inform us; That even the most Barbarous have some Religion amongst them. Particularly Mon. Rochfort (Hist. de Carrib. t. 4. c. i 3.) and F. du Tertre, (Hist. Nat. de Antilles, Par. 7. c. 3.) who who were conversant amongst the Caribbeans, do both agree; That they have some knowledge of one Supreme God in Heaven, who is of Infinite Goodness, and hurts no Body: And that they believe the Immortality of the Soul. And the like might be affirmed of other Savages.

But to proceed, It appears very Probable, That the Soul is Immortal, and that there shall be another Life after this, not only from the Inclination of our Nature, but also from,

That there is a Scala Naturae, and that Natural Beings are of different Degrees and Perfections, and that Man is the most Perfect, and most Happy of Sublunary Creatures, is so generally acknowledged, that it never yet was seriously Disputed by the greatest Sceptick. Lord! what is Man that thou art mindful of him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the Angels, and crowned him with Glory and Honour, Psal. 8. 4; 5.

But how this should be true, unless the Soul of Man is Immortal, and unless there is another Life after this, would puzzle you to resolve me.

If there is no other Life but what we enjoy in this World, and if there are no other Pleasures but the Sensual Satisfactions of the Body, Then those Creatures must be granted to be most Happy, which have the largest enjoyment of those Sensual Pleasures. And should the Comparison be strictly made, it would plainly appear, that Brutes have the advantage of Rational Beings. For,

1. It
Immortality of the Soul.

1. It is observed, that several Brute Creatures do outlive Mankind, and continue much longer in the World than he. The Constitutions of their Bodies, their Stamina Vitae, are more firm and robust, and consequently, they are more strong and healthy, not so liable to be snatch'd away by Sickness and Diseases, as Man is.

2. The Brute Creatures do seem generally to have a quicker Sense of Pleasure, as well as a longer Enjoyment of it. And of this our exhausted Teachers have been observed to complain, as a great defect in themselves, but a privilege in the Brutes, and do much envy them for it.

3. The Brutes have a more free and unlimited Enjoyment.

They have no Fears and Jealousies from this or that, to abate their Desires, and damp their Pleasures. They are neither controul'd with the Checks of Conscience, nor disturb'd disturb'd with the apprehension of an After-reckoning; but do freely, and without interruption, enjoy the dictates of their natural Inclinations.

We have indeed a Noble Faculty in us, our Reason, which we highly value as our Crown and Glory, and do justly call it the perfection of our Nature. But were there no future State, this admired Faculty would be so far from being our Perfection, that it would be vain and vexing.

For were there no other Happiness to be enjoyed but the sensual Pleasures of the Body, no other satisfaction but to eat, and drink, and sleep, and propagate our Kind; were this the whole of our expectation, our Reason then would be wholly useless; since the Senses and Appetites we have in common with Brutes, would be sufficient for such Enjoyments.

Nay
Immortality of the Soul.

Nay further; If there is nothing to be enjoyed by us, but what is Carnal and Sensual, our Reason would be so far from being our Ornament and Perfection, that it would only be the Plague and Torment of our Nature.

For nothing is more irksome than Disappointments. And therefore to have the Desire and Expectation of a future State implanted in our Nature, without Possibility to obtain it, would render us more wretched and despicable than the Brutes. For the Brutes do never vex themselves with fruitless expectations, nor weary themselves with vain pursuits, nor torment themselves with the fearts of a disappointment, but take their Pleasures when their Appetites crave them, and they are freely offer'd to them.

In all which, and many other respects, were there no other Life

I after
after this, we should have great cause to envy their happiness; and might justly affirm concerning Mankind, as St. Paul did of Christians. If in this Life only we have hope in Christ, we Christians are of all Men most miserable, 1 Cor. 15.19. So, If in this Life only we have hope, Mankind is of all Creatures most miserable.
You cannot therefore have such shallow apprehensions of God, as to think that such Wisdom, Power, and Goodness, should so ill contrive his Creation, as that the Noblest Being should be finally the most unhappy.
Is it not therefore at least highly Probable, That there is another Life after this; That better things are prepared for us in another World; and that the Soul is of an Immortal Nature, and thereby is made capable for ever to enjoy them?
But this is not only Probable, but Blessed be God, it is,
4. Certain.

To prove that the Immortality of the Soul is Probable, is to give some Reasons for it; but to prove that it is Certain, is to give such Reasons as are firm and valid. And that the following Reasons may appear to be such, I must Premise; That there are different degrees of Certainty. For all Truths are not equally evident, nor are capable of the same manner of Proof.

The highest degree of Certainty, and the greatest Evidence that can be pretended, is our own Sense and Experience.

We commonly say, Seeing is Believing; that is, This is the best Argument for the Truth of any thing, that we our selves do see it. And the Experience which doth arise from our Senses, hath such Force and Conviction, viction, that no pretence of Reason to the contrary can ever be regarded. We are certain that Snow is white, and that Fire is hot: Because we see the one, and feel the other.
And should the greatest Sceptick pretend to prove that they are not,
we should take little notice of his Arguments. For Men will trust their own Senses and Experience, against any subtilty of Reason whatsoever.

Now thus far I do readily grant;
That with this kind of Certainty, whilst we are in this World, we cannot pretend to be certain that the Soul is Immortal; or that there is another Life after this. For the Soul
being a pure Spirit, cannot be the Object of any Corporeal Sense, nor must we pretend to any sensible Evidence of a future State, because Sense is only of things present.

But those who are actually remoyed into another World, they are unde-undeniably certain, and are evidently convinced of the Truth of these things; and cannot possibly, if they would, have the least doubt of the Reality of them.

Those blessed Souls, who now live in the reviving Presence of God; and are possess’d of those unspeakable Joys which we cannot now conceive; They who see God face to face, are undeniably Certain from their own Experience, that there is a Happiness in another World, and that their Souls are Immortal, for ever to enjoy it.

And those wretched and miserable Spirits, who feel the Vengeance of God, and are plunged into the horrors of eternal Darkness; who lie groaning under his Wrath, and the severity of his Justice; they cannot now possibly doubt of that, which they have so sceptically disputed in this World: but do now be-believe upon irresistible Evidence, and are undeniably convinced of the Reality of that State, and the insupportable Misery of it.

When therefore our Scepticks do demand, that we should prove the Certainty of a Future State; do they expect that we should make this evident to their Senses? That Heaven should be open, and the Glories of it visible to their Mortal Eyes? And that Hell should be uncovered, and that they should see the Flames, and hear the Shrieks and Howlings of the Damned?

Is this the Evidence they expect? Will nothing less than this convince them?

If so, we must freely confess, that as our present State will not admit it, so if it would, it is not reasonable we should have it. Because such violent irresistible Evidence would very much lessen, if not not quite destroy the Virtue of Obedience. For it is scarce to be imagined, that any Man who had seen the Glories of Heaven, and the Torments of Hell, should ever after be tempted to do any thing that would deprive him of that Happiness, or bring him to that Misery. Thus far, I say, I must needs grant to these Scepticks; we cannot be certain of the Immortality of the Soul, and a future State.
Immortality of the Soul.

But then we are to admonish them, that besides This Certainty of Sense and Experience, there is another degree of Certainty which is called the Certainty of Faith. Which tho' not so evident and convincing as the former, yet is the utmost we can pretend to in this Life. For, here in this World, we walk by Faith, not by sight, 2 Cor. 5.7.

This therefore is that which I am to explain and confirm.
Faith is the evidence of things not seen, Heb. 11.1. That is, Things that are invisible, either in their own nature, or as future, are not only evident to our Senses, but are only known and discerned by Faith. So I or say, the only Evidence we can expect of the Truth of such things, of their Reality or their Nature, is Faith: For however certain they may be in themselves, yet to us, they are only certain by Faith.

Now Faith, in the general Notion of it, is a Perswasion of the Mind concerning any thing. Let the Instance of that Perswasion be what it will. Whether it be concerning the Truth of any Proposition; or concerning the Existence, or Futurition, or Lawfulness, or Convenience, or Possibility, or Goodness of any Thing, or the contrary: Such Perswasion is called Faith.

But
Immortality of the Soul.

But here we must Observe; That this is only the Vulgar and Popular, but not the strict and Philosophical Notion of Faith. For when we discourse with those who pretend to be critical and exact, and who expect it from us that we should speak properly, then we must distinguish this general Persuasion or Assent, from other Acts of the Understanding. And then Faith is properly this:

Faith is a giving Credit to a thing, or taking it to be true, upon the Testimony or Authority of such Persons as declare it. And herein it differs from other kinds of Assent; because in them we Believe upon the Evidence and apparent Reason of the things themselves. For when things are apparent of themselves, either in respect of our Sense, (as that Snow is white, and Fire is hot) or in respect of our Understanding, (as that the whole of any thing is greater than any one part of the whole); I say, when things are thus evident, then the Assent which we give is called Knowledge, but not Faith.

But when any thing propounded to us, is neither apparent to our Sense, nor evident to our Understanding, in and of itself; and yet appeareth to us to be true, by virtue of some Testimony given to it, this Assent is properly called Faith.

And this is the only Certainty we now can have of the Immortality of the Soul, and a future State.

We are firmly persuaded, That the Soul is Immortal, and that We shall live for ever in another World, because these Truths are Divinely Revealed, that is, they are testified and declared by an All-knowing, and most Just and Faithful God, who can neither Deceive nor be Deceived; and therefore though these things things are not as yet evident to us, we now firmly believe them.

If here the Sceptick shall Demand; How are we certain that God hath thus declared? Where hath he told us, that the Soul is Immortal, and that after Death we shall be Raised again, and shall live for ever in another World?

To this we directly Answer;

That these Truths are revealed in the Holy Scripture; but more especially in that Part of it, which is called the New Testament, or the Gospel.

St. Paul tells us expressly, that the clear and certain discovery of a future State, is owing to the Christian Religion, and made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ; who hath abolished Death, and brought Life and Immortality to light through the Gospel, 2 Tim. 1. 10.
This Phrase of bringing Immortality to Light, is not to be understood Absolutely, as if it were wholly a new Discovery, which the World had no apprehension of before, (for not only Jews, by Revelation, but also Heathens, by the Light of Nature, as I have already shewed, had some probable Conjectures and Hopes concerning another Life after this, and were in some measure persuaded, that when Men died they were not wholly extinguished, but did pass into another World, and did there receive Rewards or Punishments according to their Behaviour in this Life): I say, this Expression is not Absolute, but Comparative. And the meaning of it is this: Life and Immortality is brought to Light by the Gospel; that is, By the coming of Christ into the World, Immortal Life is incomparably more evident and manifest than it was before.
Immortality of the Soul.

As to the Heathen. The Common People, who followed the By-ass and Inclination of their Nature, and had not their Understandings perplexed with Niceties and Objections, as the Philosophers had, they were generally inclined to believe the Soul's Immortality, and a future State. But the Philosophers had Wrangled and Disputed the Matter into so much Uncertainty, (some stiffly denying, others wavering and doubting) that those who were most inclined to believe these Truths, did rather express their desires and hopes, than their full assurance concerning them.

And 'tis observable (which may seasonably be applied to our Modern Scepticks), that while these Disputes were managed among the Philosophers of Old, though those who asserted the Immortality of the Soul, had the better Reason of their side, side, yet their Adversaries spake with greater Confidence and Assurance. And that always bears the greatest Sway among weak and injudicious People.

As to the Jews. They had indeed some further Knowledge than the Heathen. They had not only the Light of Reason, but also of Revelation. But then that Revelation was very imperfect. For the discoveries of a future State, under the old Legal Dispensation, were dark and obscure; and usually represented under Types and Figures. As of a long Life here upon Earth, and a Land flowing with Milk and Honey. And though the wiser sort of the Jews did see thorough the Vail (as is plainly affirmed of those Worthies, Heb. 11.) yet the generality of them had slender apprehensions of this Truth.
Immortality of the Soul.

But in the Gospel we find the Immortality of the Soul, and a future State, not barely asserted, nor proved by uncertain Arguments, nor depending on the Opinion of Philosophers, nor shadow'd and obscured with Types and Figures, but delivered with the greatest Authority, revealed with the clearest Light, and confirmed with the strongest Evidence.

For our Blessed Saviour, (who was sent down from Heaven by his Father to instruct us) hath not only declared the Immortality of the Soul, and a future State; but hath also given us a sensible Demonstration of these Truths, in his Resurrection from the Dead, and his visible Ascension into Heaven.

Of both these I shall treat distinctly.

1. Our Blessed Saviour hath declared, that the Soul is Immortal, and that there is another Life after this

And because some who acknowledge a future State, deny the Immortality of the Soul, I shall shew,

1. That our Blessed Saviour hath declared in his Gospel, that the Soul is Immortal.

This I shall prove from Matt. 10. 28. Compared with Luke 12. 4, 5:

Matt. 10. 28.

And fear not them which kill the Body, but are not able to kill the Soul: But rather fear him which is able to destroy both Soul and Body in Hell.

Luke 12. 4, 5.

And I say unto you, my Friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the Body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear; Fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into Hell; yea, I say unto you, fear him.

The Sense of which two Places I shall express in this Paraphrase.

Behold, I send you forth as Sheep in the midst of Wolves; and ye shall be hated
Immortality of the Soul.

hated of all Men for my Names sake; But I say unto you, my Friends, Be not afraid of them that can only kill the Body, and after that have no more that they can do: for they are not able to kill the Soul. But I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: Fear him which after he hath killed the Body, and taken away your Temporal Life, hath a further Power to cast into Hell; and there is able to destroy, that is, Punish and Torment, both Soul and Body in that dismal Place, where the Worm dieth not, and the Fire is not quenched.

This is the plain Sense of these two Places of Scripture.

From whence I observe, in the Words of the Learned Dr. Whitby, in his Comment on Matth. 10. 28.

' These Words seem to contain a certain Evidence, That the Soul dies not with the Body; but continues afterward in a State of Sensibility. For, That
1. That which it is allowed that Men can do to the Body, it is denied that they can do to the Soul. Therefore Christ speaks not in these Words of Death Eternal, (for that kind of Death Men cannot inflict upon the Body, or hinder its Resurrection); therefore it is spoken of a Temporal Death.

Note 2dly. That they who by killing the Body make the Soul also to Perish, till the Re-union and Reviviscence both of Soul and Body, do also kill the Soul; and so do more than they who can kill the Body only. And they who by killing of the Body render the Soul or Spirit of a Man Insensible, and deprived of all possibility of thinking, or perceiving any thing, do also kill the Soul. For 'tis not easy to perceive, how an Intelligible, Thinking, and Per-
Immortality of the Soul.

Receiving Being, can be more (or indeed otherwise) killed, than by depriving it of all Sensation, Thought, and Perception. The Body itself being killed, by a total Privation of its Capacity of Sense and Motion.

Since therefore in St. Luke, Ch. 12. 4. Christ saith, The Adversaries of the Christians can only kill their Bodies; and here, that they cannot kill their Souls; it remains, That the Soul doth not Perish with the Body, nor is it reduced into an Insensible State by the Death of it.

Thus that Judicious Commentator.

And that the Soul doth not Sleep with the Body, as some Phrase it, (which is a most absurd Unphilosophical Opinion) is undeniably proved from Phil. 1. 21, 22, &c. Ver. 21. For to me to Live is Christ, and to Die is Gain.
22. But if I live in the Flesh, this is the Fruit of my Labour: yet what I shall choose, I wot not.

23. For I am in a straight betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better.

24. Nevertheless, to abide in the Flesh is more needful for you.

The Apostle is here debating with himself, whether it were better for him to Live or to Die? I am in a straight, faith he, betwixt these two. Verse 23. I know not what to resolve, nor how to determine the matter. What I shall choose, I wot not. Verse 22. On the one hand, To Live is Christ, Verse 21. that is, This is the End and Design of my Life, to serve and honour Christ. If I live, my Life shall be spent in Christ's Service. And to Die is Gain. That is, If I die, my Death tends to my own unspeakable joy and advantage. For, to depart and to be with Christ,
Immortality of the Soul.

Christ, is far better for me. Nevertheless to abide in the Flesh, is more needful for you, Verse 24. That is, Since my Life may be of so great Use to the Church, I am contented, if God so please, to live a little longer, and to continue still amongst you.

But now, if St. Paul's Soul were Mortal, and did Die and Perish with his Body; to be as Nothing, to be Stupid and Insensible till the Resurrection; the Argument is lost. He could be in no straight; there would be no difficulty, how to determine the Case.

For pray, Is it not far more desirable to continue in this World, to be serviceable to Christ and his Church, than by Dying, to be Stupid and Senseless, like a Stock or a Stone, till the Resurrection?

The Truth is so plain and undeniable, it cannot possibly be suppressed.
To suppose here (as a late Writer hath done) that St. Paul was one of Heaven's Favourites, and so (or as such) was Raised by an Antecedent Resurrection to Glory. (Vid. Farther Thoughts of Human Soul, P. 57.)

This, I say, when strictly examined, is very Impertinent; and is only an Instance of a Baffled Cause.

That St. Paul was a Favourite of Heaven, is not doubted: But that all such Favourites shall be Raised immediately after their Death, and be Exalted to Glory and Eternal Happiness before the Day of Judgment, (as is pretended), this we deny; and let this Author prove it if he can. But though he confidently Affirms it, he despairs to Prove it; and hath made his Confession in these Words.

But indeed, I do not find by the whole Current of the Scripture, but that we shall all appear before the Judgment-Seat of Christ, at the end of the World, and not before, and then receive the Just Recompence of our Works. Vid. Second Thoughts, &c. P. 334.
Immortality of the Soul.

From these Premises it doth appear, That the Soul is an Immortal Being, different and distinct from the Body; and as such is capable to live and subsist without the Body.

Which being granted, the Certainty of a Future State (the next Thing to be established), is so evident from the Gospel, I shall not need to insist much upon it.

How plainly doth our Blessed Saviour declare, That at the end of the World, he will come to Judgment: And will then Pronounce a Final, Irreversible Sentence upon all Mankind. The Righteous shall be received with this reviving Absolution, Come ye Blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the Foundation of the World.
But the wicked shall be dismissed with this Dismal Doom; Depart from me, ye Cursed, into everlasting Fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels. And these shall go away into everlasting Punishment: but the Righteous into Life Eternal, Matth. 25.

And as a further Proof of a Future State, our Blessed Saviour doth thus comfort his Disciples, immediately before his departure from them: Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. Into my Father’s House are many Mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you: I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto my Self, that where I am, there ye may be also, John 14.1, 2, 3.

But the Certainty of a Future State is not only thus Declared by our Blessed Saviour, but also plainly Demonstrated by his own Resurrection.
Immortality of the Soul.

Resurrection from the Dead, and his Visible Ascension into Heaven.

This is such a sensible Argument, as is levelled to the Capacities of all Mankind, and the shallowest Understandings are able to comprehend it. For tho' their Reason may be imposed on, they will trust their Senses.

The most certain Things in the World, are liable to the Cavils of Sceptical Men. And there is nothing so plain and evident, but may be obscured, and may admit of false Colours, at least in the apprehension of some Persons. For all Men are not capable of the Force of an Argument, nor can truly judge of the Weakness or Strength of it. Such Men are very apt to be imposed on, and to be moved any way, with some little shew and appearance of Truth.

But
But though these Scepticks may baffle their Reason, they cannot persuade them out of their Senses. Like him, who tho' he could not answer the Philosopher’s Arguments against Motion, yet did effectually confute him, by walking before him.

And herein the Wisdom of God hath graciously condescended to the Weakness of Men; in giving such familiar Assurance of these great Truths, the Resurrection and Ascension of our Lord. For the most Illiterate Person can tell whether a Man be alive or dead. And can as certainly declare, that what he observes is true; if he sees a Man visibly ascend into Heaven. I say, every Man is capable of the Force of this Argument.

And indeed what can be more effectual to convince us of another Life after this, than to see a Man Raised from the Dead, and restored red to a new Life? And what can be more proper to assure us there is a Heaven, than to see one visibly taken up into it?

And therefore, since God himself hath given us Assurance of a Life to come, by the greatest Demonstrations of it, in the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of his Son; he hath thereby taken away all Suspensions and Doubts concerning a Future State.

But against this, our Modern Scepticks do make this Objection.

HAD We seen Jesus of Nazareth Dead, and Alive again: Had we seen him taken down Dead from the Cross, and laid in a Tomb: Had We then after this, not only Seen him, but Conversed with him for Forty days together: And had We then seen him with our own Eyes, Eyes, taken up from the Earth into the Air, and visibly Ascending into Heaven; We might then have some Reason to Believe these Things. To this, I

Answer.

If Men will turn perfect Scepticks, and causethly suspect the Truth of all such Passages as they did not actually see done with their own Eyes, or hear with their own Ears, they are not worthy of Conviction. If this be their Temper, we must then Turn them to Grass, and there leave them. But if there is such a thing as Fides Historica, and if any Assurance can be had of those Transactions, which are beyond, and above our own Times, there may then be given as certain Evidence of the Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus, as any Passages, trans-
Immortality of the Soul.

transacted at so great a distance, are capable to admit. For, These things were not done in a Corner. But plainly and openly, and in the sight of many Witnesses, and with such remarkable Circumstances, as might best expose them to the strictest Examinations.

Now in order to the Conviction of these Deists (which is most heartily prayed for) I shall desire them to grant me this Postulatum, (which I am sure they cannot deny) viz.

That the Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus are both Matter of Fact. And consequently, can no otherwise be proved, than Matters of Fact use to be.

When we design to convince another that such a Thing was Done, the surest Evidence we can give him, is the Testimony of sufficient Credible Witnesses, who saw it done. And he who is not satisfied with such a Proof, we look upon him as a Person not fit to be Discoursed with.

Now there was never any Matter of Fact, better or more strongly Attested, than the Truth of this Assertion, That Jesus Rose from the Dead. And that, whether we consider the Nature of the Thing to be Attested; or the Number and Quality of the Witnesses Attesting.

First, The Thing to be attested was of that Nature, that it might be fully perceived by those who saw it; that is, It was an Object fit and proper to be judged of by their Senses.

As to the Death and Passion of Jesus (the necessary Antecedents of his Resurrection) they were plain Objects of Sense, done in the Presence of the whole City of Jerusalem, and consequently of his greatest Adversaries. That he truly Died, all
Immortality of the Soul.

all the World could testify. No Man's Death was ever more Solemn or Remarkable: Nor was this ever disputed.

So that thus far we are Fix'd and Certain, That if Jesus did Rise again, his Resurrection was no Juggling Trick, but a Real Miracle.

After his Resurrection, those to whom he Appeared, were frightned at it, supposing him to be a Spirit. But he sufficiently assures them of the contrary, by Appealing to their Senses: Behold my Hands and my Feet, that it is I my self. Handle me and see, for a Spirit hath not Flesh and Bones, as ye see me have, Luke 24. 39. But,

Secondly, Not only the Nature of the Thing (of which even our Senses are competent Judges) but also the Witnesses attesting, do sufficiently prove that Jesus is Risen.

Now
Now there are two things must concur to make a Credible Witness, Knowledge and Integrity.

1. Knowledge. No Man ought to be received as a fit Witness in any matter, unless it do appear, that he had the Opportunity fully to inform himself of the Truth of that which he pretends to Attest.

Should any Man affirm, That he saw a Thing done, or heard a Word spoken; and yet it shall be depo-sed by as Credible Witnesses as himself, that he was at the same time Twenty Miles distant; such Evidence, however confidently delivered, must needs be False and Ridiculous.

But now, the Disciples of our Lord had all imaginable Advantages to know the Truth of what they witness, whilst they affirm, That Jesus is Risen.

They were his constant Followers and Attendants. And for the Space of
Immortality of the Soul.

Three Years, were the daily Observers of his Conversation. And 'tis worthy your Notice, That when by the Apostacy of Judas, they wanted one of their Number, they were very careful to chuse such a one to succeed him, as had been a constant Follower of Jesus, and had taken exact notice of every thing they were to Witness. Wherefore (faith St. Peter) of these Men which have companied with us, all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the Baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be Ordained to be a Witness with us of his Resurrection, Acts 1. 21, 22.

Observe here how exact they were in their Choice. They would admit of none, but one who had been with them from first to last. That could speak things, as wephrase it, not by Hear-say only, but:
but of his own Knowledge. That if any Man should ask him, Did you your self See? Or, did you your self Hear this which you now Report? That he might then truly answer, that he did; and that what he Preached was upon his own knowledge.

Now the Disciples of our Lord were the constant Hearers of his Doctrine; and amongst other Passages, they heard him expressly declare, That he would Rise again the Third Day. Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up. But he spake of the Temple of his Body, John 2. 19, 21.

And this Expression of Rising the Third Day was so familiar, and so often repeated, that the Chief Priests and Pharisees took notice of it to Pilate; saying, Sir, we remember that that Deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will Rise again, Mat. 27. 63.
Moreover, The Disciples and Followers our Lord were not only instructed in his Life-time, that he would Rise again; but they likewise saw him after he was Risen. And in such a Manner, with such Circumstances as might most effectually command their Belief. They Saw him, not only once or twice, but several times: They saw him, not only singly and apart, and in lesser Numbers, but all of them yea Five Hundred of them at once. And therefore tho' one or two might perhaps be mistaken, yet so great a number could not possibly be imposed on. Especially when we have considered further; That they not only saw him, but had likewise all other imaginable Evidences to Convince them.

For when he had Appeared to them, and Discoursed with them, which which might also be done by a Spirit; to give them a certain proof that he was no Spirit, Handle me and see, (that is, observe and satisfy your selves) for a Spirit hath not Flesh and Bones, as you see me have.

And left they might yet scruple, that it was not the same Jesus that was Crucified, but some other Dead Body (which, being moved and actuated by an Angel, did take his Shape, and appear in his Likeness); to remove this Doubt, Behold, faith he, my Hands and my Feet, that it is I my self. Those Hands and Feet which were pierced with Nails, and fastned to the Accursed Tree. And if you will not believe your Eyes, (which according to the vulgar Notion, may have a Mist cast before them) then to satisfy your selves further, take the Proof of another of your Senses. Handle me and see. And when St. Thomas, was a little more more distrustful than the rest: Reach hither thy Finger, and behold my Hands, and reach hither thy Hand, and thrust it into my Side, and be not Faithless, but Believing, John 20. 27.

Now recollect the forementioned Passages, and then Resolve me. What could have been further either said or done to Convince them That Jesus was Risen? They Saw him, he Discoursed with them, did Eat before them, they Touched him andHandled him. And all this variety of Conversation they had with him, not only once or twice, but for the space of Forty Days together.

The Premises considered, you must needs grant, That the Apostles were very sufficient Witnesses of our Blessed Saviour's Resurrection, in respect of their Knowledge. That is, They had all imaginable Advantages to know the Truth of what they Witnessed and Attested, when
A Vindication of the

when they Preached that Jesus was Risen.

And the Apostles had the same Capacity to judge of the Truth of his Ascension, as they had of his Resurrection. For, while they beheld, he was taken up. And, they looked sted-fastly toward Heaven as he went up, Acts 1. 9, 10. That is, they themselves saw him Ascend. They did not only hear it from others, but they themselves saw it with their own Eyes, which was the highest Evidence that could be given them.

But,

2dly. Supposing their Knowledge, and that they had sufficient means of Information; yet whether were they Persons of that Honesty and Integrity as to be believed? or was there not just reason to suspect that they might deliver a Falsity instead of Truth?
Immortality of the Soul.

And for this, let me desire you to consider that known Saying, Nemo gratis Malus est: There is scarce any Man so absurd as to be a Villain for nothing, or so impertinent-ly wicked, as to do Mischief for Mischiefs sake. Whoever therefore shall presume Publickly and Solemnly to deliver a false Testimo-ny, he must be supposed to do it upon some urging Cause. As, To Raise himself a Name: To Please a Party: To Advance his Fortune; or to gratify a Revenge.

Now, All that is in the World, saith St. John, is the Lust of the Flesh, the Lust of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life, 1 John 2. 16. And whatever the Apostles could propose to themselves, it will be comprehended under one of these Three, Honours, Riches, or Pleasures.

1. As to Honour. They could not expect it, since all Dignities and
A Vindication of the

Promotions were then in the hands of Jews or Pagans: From whom they received nothing but Ignominy and Reproach, and by whom they were accounted the Dung of the Earth, and the Off-scouring of the World.

2. As to Riches. Instead of gaining an Estate, they were forced to part with all that they had, either by a voluntary resignation, to supply the Wants of others (for at first they had all things common), or else by the Fraud and Rapines of their Oppressors. They no sooner came to one City, but they were Persecuted, and forced to fly unto another: And by this Ambulatory kind of Life, without any fix’d certain Being, they were so far from being able (had they otherwise designed it) to have raised Estates and Fortunes, that they liv’d upon the Alms and Charity of others. And then...
Immortality of the Soul.

3dly. What kind of Pleasures they were to expect, as their Master did foretell, so they themselves did sufficiently experience. In the World ye shall have Tribulation. They shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, and ye shall be Betrayed, both by Parents, and Brethren, and Kinsfolk, and Friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to Death; and ye shall be hated of all Men for my Names sake: Yea the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you, will think that he doth God Service.

In short; If Contumelies and Reproaches, if Racks and Prisons, if Flames and Gibbets, with other their most Exquisite Tormenting Deaths; if these be Pleasures, then indeed the Apostles and Followers of our Lord had their share of Pleasures.
A Vindication of the

And now having seriously debated these things, I desire our Sceptical Deists to resolve me, What just Cause can be assigned, Why Persons of Sober, Rational Deportment (having the same Principle of Self-Preservation with other Men) should by Publishing the Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus, not only deprive themselves of all Comfortable Enjoyments, but also submit to the greatest Severities, and at last Death itself? I say, What Cause can be assigned of such Self-denial, if they had not the highest Conviction of the Truth of what they Published?
Immortality of the Soul.

THE CLOSE.

From these Premises it undeniably appears; That the Apostles of our Lord were very Credible Witnesses of his Resurrection and Ascension. The Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus are a visible, convincing Argument of the Immortality of the Soul, and a Future State. Therefore it is Certain, That the Soul is Immortal; and, That there is another Life after this.

FINIS.
THE CONTENTS.

THE Introduction, shewing the Design of this Treatise, Page 1

Some Preliminary Considerations.

1. Not to be surprized that this Truth is Contradicted, p. 3
2. Such Proof to be accepted, as the nature of the Thing will admit, p. 4
3. In this Dispute we suppose, That there is a God, p. 5
4. The Arguments insisted on, are Plain and Popular, p. 6
   What is meant by the Soul? p. 8
   What by the Immortality of the Soul? p. 14

The Immortality of the Soul, and a Future State is,

1. Desirable.
   A Description of Heaven, from page 34. to page 63.
   The Desirableness of a Future State, Vindicated from an Objection, p. 64

The Immortality of the Soul, and a Future State is,

2. Possible, p. 76
3. Probable, p. 88

This
The CONTENTS.

This Probability proved, from
1. Creation, p. 90
2. Providence, p. 95

This further proved, from the Nature of Man.
1. The Inclination of Man's Nature, p. 103

The Immortality of the Soul, and a Future State is,
4. Certain,

Not with the Certainty of Sense and Experience, p. 116
But the Certainty of Faith, p. 122
The Immortality of the Soul proved from Mat. 10.28, compared with Luke 12.4, 5, p. 128
The Sleep of the Soul Confuted, from Phil. 1. 21, 22, &c. p. 132
This Text vindicated from Second Thoughts, &c. p. 134
The Certainty of a Future State proved from the Gospel, p. 135 Demonstrated by the Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus, p. 137
A Sceptical Objection, Answer, p. 139
The Close, p. 155
A Vindication of the Immortality of the Soul, and a Future State. 1s. 6d.

A Theological Discourse of Wills and Testaments. 12o. Price 6d.

A Discourse of Death-bed Repentance. 24o. Price 2d.

An Exhortation to the Holy Communion. 24o. Price 2d.

An Exposition on the Church Catechism. 8vo. Price 6d.

A Method of Daily Devotion. 24o. Price 2d.

An Exhortation to the Lord's Day. 24o. Price 2d.

An Exposition of the Lord's Supper; suitably applied, and fit to be annexed to the Christian Monitor. 12o. Price 2d.

Mr. Dorotheo's Familiar Guide to the Lord's Supper; suitably applied, and fit to be annexed to the Christian Monitor. 12o. Price 2d.

The Way to prevent the Ruin of a Sinner. 12o. Price 6d.

An Exposition on the Church Catechism. 8vo. Price 6d.

— against Drunkenness, Curfew, and Swearing. 24o. Price 2d.

— against Debauchery and Prophaneness. 24o. Price 2d.

— against Blasphemy. 24o. Price 2d.

— against Debauchery and Prophaneness. 24o. Price 2d.

— against Debauchery and Prophaneness. 24o. Price 2d.

— against Debauchery and Prophaneness. 24o. Price 2d.

— against Debauchery and Prophaneness. 24o. Price 2d.

— against Debauchery and Prophaneness. 24o. Price 2d.

Archbishop Tillotson on the Sacrament, 8vo. Price 3d.

Dr. ASHETON.

Written by the Reverend Dr. ASHETON.
Dr. Bates's Works. Fol.
—of Spiritual Perfection. Octavo.
—Four Last Things. Octavo.
—of Resignation. Octavo.
—of Forgiveness of Sins. Octavo.
Archbishop Tillotson's Six Sermons of Stedfastness in Religion; of Family Religion; of Education of Children; the advantages of an early Piety. 120. Price 1 s. 6 d.
Dr. Barrow's Exposition on the Creed, the Lord's-Prayer, and Ten Commandments, Octavo.
Dr. Barrow's Sermons of Evil-speaking, Octavo.
—Practical Discourses upon the Consideration of our Latter End, and the Danger and Mischief of delaying Repentance. Octavo. Price 1 s. 6 d.
Dr. Barrow of Industry.
Clark's Concordance to the Holy Bible. 120. Price 1 s.
Advice of a Father, or Counsel to a Child; directing him how to demean himself in the most Important Passages of his Life. 120. Price 1 s.
Manchester's Contemplations of Death and Immortality. The Fifth Edition. 120. Price 1 s.

All Printed for B. Aylmer.
The text is not clearly visible due to the quality of the image. It appears to be a page from a book or a manuscript, possibly containing religious or philosophical content. However, the text is not legible enough to transcribe accurately. If you have a clearer image or more context, please provide it for a better analysis.